BRITISH FREIGHTER REPORTED SUNK BY INSURGENT PLANES

Vessel Said to Have Been Sent to Bottom Sixteen Miles Off Gerona—All of Crew Saved, Coast Defence Station Said—Had Wheat and Milk Cargo

VALENCIA, Oct. 30 (P).—The Northern Coastal Defence tonight notified the Spanish Ministry of Defence that the British freighter Jean Weems was sunk this morning in the Mediterranean Sea by insurgent airplanes which dropped fifteen bombs.

The vessel was sixteen miles off the port of Gerona, en route from Marseille to Barcelona with a cargo of wheat and condensed milk when the bombing occurred, the English captain said.

ALL WERE SAVED

The crew of twenty-six included two non-intervention observers, whose names were given as Gustavo U. Chesom, of Sweden, and Arnold Cifre, of Lithuania. All were saved. (The Jean Weems, a 2,349-ton vessel, appears in Lloyd's register as American-owned and registered at Baltimore, Md., but Lloyd's disclosed in London the freighter had changed to British registry during July. The British Admiralty said it had not heard of the attack.)

Greater Victoria Community Chest Campaign Opens Tomorrow

"We are all ready for the word 'Go!'" said F. E. Winslow, president of the Greater Victoria Community Chest Board, in his statement to the press yesterday as to the organization plans for the great concerted campaign that will open tomorrow to raise $72,500 for twenty-three welfare organizations which are in the habit of making their individual annual appeals to the public for finances to carry on their work.

In other words, organization is completed. All that now remains is for the canvassers to "get going," and for the public to give them all possible support.

"Tomorrow morning we will have 500 canvassers on the street. We hope the public will receive them cordially and give as liberally as possible. But we do not want anyone who cannot give to feel embarrassed about refusing. Those who cannot give can still receive the help just as much as money sometimes," Mr. Winslow declared.

TWELVE MONTHS

The president of the board also wished to remind the public that their subscriptions might, if they so wished, be spread over the next twelve months.

CUMBERLAND MAN DROWNS IN LAKE

John Frelone, Sixty Years Old, Is Found Beneath His Boat By Friend

(Special to The Colonist)
CUMBERLAND, Oct. 30.—John Frelone, sixty years of age, and a resident of Cumberland for the past forty years, was found drowned at Lake Cumberland at noon today. Mr. Frelone left the city Friday night to go up to the head of the lake. His friend, John Raga, was to go up the lake this morning and meet Mr. Frelone.

Arriving at the lake at noon today he was astonished to find Frelone's boat still at the lake. A cap was noticed floating, also an oar. Mr. Raga hurried back to Cumberland, and, along with some friends and the police, commenced to search. The body was found under the boat and brought into Cumberland Undertaking Parlor. A widow, three sons and one daughter survive.

Union Leaders Here For Important Work On Behalf of Labor

Delegates From City and Vancouver Make Plans for Draft Bill Giving Employees Right to Organize—Many Resolutions Passed

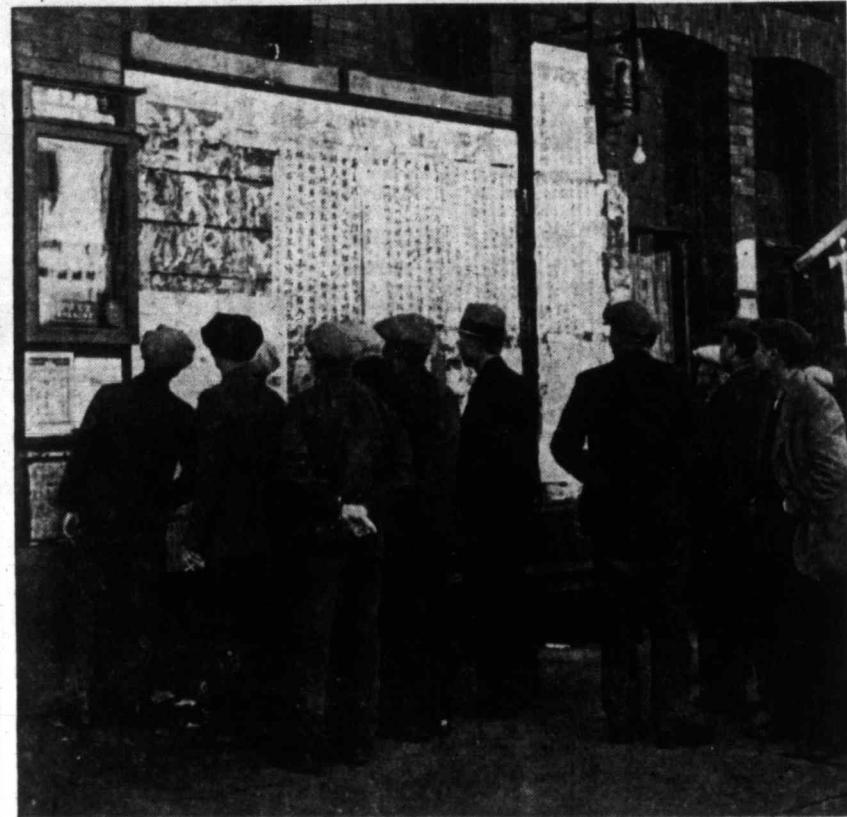

PLANS for an act to recognize in law the right of employees to organize for the furtherance of their lawful interests, and resolutions of far reaching import to the working class and those on relief, were dealt with in the Foresters' Hall yesterday by 117 delegates from eighty-three locals of Victoria and District, and Vancouver, New Westminster and District Trades and Labor Councils.

Convention officers were E. A. Jamieson, Vancouver, chairman; William H. Youhill, Victoria, vice-chairman; Victor R. Midgley, Victoria, secretary; E. H. Morrison, Vancouver, chairman of resolutions committee; Edward Smith, Vancouver, and W. Campbell, Victoria, sergeants-at-arms.

JAPANESE HINT BRITISH BREAK

Unofficial Council Serves Notice of Possible Severance of Relations

TOKIO, Oct. 30 (P).—Members of the unofficial "council on the current situation," including high army officers and members of both Houses of Parliament, served notice today diplomatic relations between Japan and Great Britain might be severed.

In a resolution passed unanimously, the more than 100 highly-placed Japanese charged Great Britain has been assisting China, and added: "The Japanese cannot allow the British to continue unmolested in their present improper doings."

The resolution declared Britain had been the main driving force in persuading convocation of the Brussels nine-power pact conference November 3, in an apparent effort to start intervention in the Chinese-Japanese undeclared war.

"If the British fail to reconsider their attitude," the resolution said: "We may be forced to take an attitude of grave determination by severing years of friendly diplomatic relations."

Explosion Shakes Residential Area

An explosion, believed to have been caused by a stick of dynamite, blew a hole about two feet square in a field facing 1493 Myrtle Street shortly before midnight, broke six panes of glass in that residence, shattered two windows in a house next door, and thoroughly alarmed residents of the vicinity. Though police immediately investigated, they were unable to find any trace of the party who detonated the explosive.

Says Tariff Only Method of Easing Canada's Problem

Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, Leader of Dominion Conservatives, Addresses B.C. Annual Meeting at New Westminster—John H. Morgan Elected President—Important Resolutions Passed

NEW WESTMINSTER, Oct. 30 (P).—Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, leader of the Dominion Conservative party, said today the only method of relieving Canada's unemployment problem lay in utilization of tariffs "that give Canadians the same chance as people of other nations."

OVER THOUSAND DEAD IN FLOOD

Many Villages in Syria Inundated—Troops Patrol Stricken Districts

DAMASCUS, Syria, Oct. 30 (P).—Troops tonight patrolled flooded, destroyed villages northeast of Damascus where more than 1,000 persons were drowned and 12,000 left homeless.

The troops were sent out following a Ministry of Interior announcement that a village on the Damascus-Baghdad road had been sacked by thieves after inhabitants fled before advancing flood waters.

Flood waters apparently reached a peak late today. All points within an area of thirty-two miles in the direction of Alep and Palmyre were inundated. In some communities not a house was left standing.

Material destruction alone already exceeded 10,000,000 francs (more than $300,000), an especially staggering sum in view of the general poverty of the region.

As French troops rushed first-aid to the stricken areas, it was learned that three villages were entirely flooded and that at least six others have been almost destroyed. In the village of Deirassiyeh alone more than 500 persons were believed lost.

THREE INJURED IN AUTO CRASH

Truck Turned Over by Collision in Early Morning Accident—None Seriously Hurt

Three persons were injured, none seriously, when cars driven by Ted Stevens, 10 Kent Road, and Jack Martin, 1234 Balmoral Road, collided at the intersection of Bay and Government Streets at 12:25 o'clock this morning.

Stevens and two companions who were driving with him, Jean Clark and Alex Paul, both of this city, were rushed to St. Joseph's Hospital in the police ambulance.

Stevens' car, a Ford truck, was turned over by the impact of the collision, police report.

STUDY LIFE OF DIONNE QUINTS

Toronto Research Specialists Learn of Development of Famous Babies

TORONTO, Oct. 30 (P).—One of the best ways to tell the Dionne quintuplets apart is by their right ears.

They have had no meat so far except liver and bacon, and their weight shows they've had a balanced diet.

They have special similarities—this set of "identical" quintuplets, which indicated, oddly enough, they are paired: Annette and Yvonne, Emilie and Marie, and Yvonne and Marie additionally paired with Cecile.

So psychologists and child-rearing experts heard today from doctors associated with the little Dionnes since birth, and from research specialists of the University of Toronto.

Out of reports on the quintuplets' progress from their birth, when they weighed an average of about two pounds, to their present state of bounding health at three years and five months, emerged a complete picture of the little sisters who unwittingly have furthered the cause of child welfare.

It was the first conference scientists and psychologists ever held on quintuplets, and the day on which the first scientific book about the quintuplets came off the press.

Are Killing Rattlers by The Hundred

RAPID CITY, SD., Oct. 30 (P).—A. M. Jackley, of Pierre, South Dakota's official snake eradicator, said today the "greatest slaughter of rattlesnakes in the history of the United States" was under way in this state. Jackley said that in three days at Timber Lake between six and seven hundred rattlesnakes were killed. Dens at Eagle Butte, Faith, Dupree and Marcus yielded hundreds of others.

MASSING FORCE ON THE BORDER

Russia and Japan Reported Adding to Troops—Soviet Protests Incursion

PEIPING, Oct. 30 (P).—Trustworthy sources said today both Japan and Russia are rapidly increasing their forces along the boundary between Japan's protectorate of Manchukuo and Soviet Russia.

It was authoritatively estimated that 40,000 Japanese troops who had taken part in the conquest of North China have been sent into North Manchukuo.

It was reported also that 20,000 Japanese troops had been sent recently from Korea into Eastern Manchukuo, where border tension was heightened by a Soviet-Manchukuo clash on the Tumen River boundary on Friday.

SOVIET PROTEST

MOSCOW, Oct. 30 (P).—The Soviet Government protested today over an alleged incursion of Japanese-Manchurian troops across the Russian-Manchukuo frontier, where they were said to have exchanged shots with Soviet frontier guards.

Tass (Russian) News Agency said in a communique "a squad of Japanese-Manchurian soldiers" crossed the frontier on Thursday and opened fire on the frontier patrol.

REBELLION VETERAN DEAD

REGINA, Oct. 30 (P).—J. M. Duncan, seventy-eight, born in Almouth, Ont., pioneer homesteader, veteran of the Riel Rebellion who was taken prisoner by Poundmaker, died here today. Mr. Duncan was sheriff of Regina district when the province was formed in 1905, later engaging in business.

Chiang-Kai-Shek Gives Direct Order for Troops' Retreat

SHANGHAI, Oct. 31 (P).—Three more British soldiers were wounded by stray shells early today in the Jessfield Park area of Shanghai, creating a new strain on Anglo-Japanese relations. Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Little and Major-General A. P. D. Telfer-Smollett, commander of Britain's army and navy forces, both made representations to the Japanese. They urged Vice-Admiral Kiyoshi Hasegawa and General Iwane Matsui, Japanese commanders, to alter the direction of their fire.

HALLOWE'EN FULL OF FUN

Young and Old Celebrate in Traditional Style—Little Damage Done

Fireworks in abundance were used last evening to mark the advent of All Hallows' evening. Young and old Victorians joined in the building of bonfires, following the traditions handed down throughout the years.

The barrage over Victoria, which started with the falling of dusk, continued until nearly midnight, not only in the suburbs, but on the downtown streets as well, but the evening passed off without untoward accident. Three children were reported to have sustained burns from crackers, but in no case were the injuries serious.

ORDERLY CELEBRATION

Warnings of parents, coupled with those of the police, tended to make the evening's celebration if not quiet at least orderly. While in Oak Bay street lights were reported damaged, for the most part the strangely-garbed youngsters who roamed the streets were content with harmless fun. There were the usual number of gates reported missing, while one

Trinidad's Chief Executive Taking Precautionary Measures Against Possible Demonstration

LONDON, Oct. 30 (P).—Troops are being held ready in Bermuda for dispatch to Trinidad at the request of Sir Murchison Fletcher, governor of the latter colony, it was learned here today.

Colonial Office officials said Sir Murchison asked that the troops be prepared and warships dispatched to Trinidad as a precautionary measure to forestall possible demonstrations in connection with the Royal Commission inquiry into the recent oil riots.

One company (100 men) of the Sherwood Foresters Regiment, stationed in Bermuda, has been ordered to prepare to sail for Trinidad at forty-eight hours' notice.

AMBASSADOR IS LEAVING PARIS

Recall to Rome by Mussolini Aggravates Strained Diplomatic Relations

PARIS, Oct. 30 (P).—Premier Mussolini of Italy today recalled his Ambassador from Paris in a move diplomats considered as aggravating France's strained diplomatic relations with Italy.

Ambassador Vittorio Cerruti will return to Rome tomorrow night, Italians said, for a leave of absence of "more or less long duration." Baron Angelo Scaduto Mendola, counsellor of embassy, is also leaving his post, placing the delicate Italo-French relations in the hands of a minor official.

The sudden recall was made, a usually well-informed diplomatic source said, because France had failed to send an ambassador to Rome and left a charge d'affaires in control of Italian relations rather than recognize the Fascist conquest of Ethiopia.

Cerruti notified the Foreign Ministry he was leaving a charge d'affaires to handle Italian relations with France, and after his visit the Foreign Office issued a communique.

ISSUE COMMUNIQUE

"The Italian Ambassador has made known to the Foreign Ministry that he has been invited by his Government to leave on vacation."

Diplomatic sources said they believed the rupture would not go any further as the Ambassador's departure was felt to be due entirely to Mussolini's belief Italian representation at Paris should be on the same basis as the French at Rome.

In Rome, informed circles said the Cerruti move was part of a contemplated Italian diplomatic shake-up.

Before Cerruti made his informal call to the Foreign Ministry, French officials said they had known Italy has contemplated such a move for some time.

Liberals to Hold Nominations Here On November 5

THE central executive of the Victoria Liberal Association last evening decided that the nominating convention, to name a candidate to contest the by-election to be held in this city to fill the vacancy in the House of Commons caused by the death of Hon. Dr. S. F. Tolmie, would be held next Friday, November 5. The Chamber of Commerce Auditorium will be used if available. Dr. W. J. Knox, Kelowna, president of the British Columbia Liberal Association, briefly addressed the gathering, which officials declared, was one of the best attended on record.

Donald won the prize in a hunt competition.

THE PRIZE WINNERS

Douglas Street and Garbally Road (J. T. Bruce, master of ceremonies)—Costumes, Billy Dorward, June Bland, Eva Hunter, Bill Lowry; treasure hunt, Helen Christian; finding the mystery man, Dorcen Burnett.

Spencer Park (C. F. Foxall and Ian McLorie, masters of ceremonies)—Costumes, Ronald and Donald Mooney, Marion Garnham, Jocelyn Cruickshanks, Donald Hepburn.

Central Park (C. Freegard and W. J. Pynn, masters of ceremonies)—Costumes, Betty Trisena, Lillian MacNair, P. A. Fraser; treasure hunt, Marion Pyle; finding the mystery man, George Bates and Clem James.

Oswego and Niagara Streets (J. W. Berry, master of ceremonies)—Costumes, Sheila Ramsay, Barbara Melvin, George Norman, Joyce Springling.

Victoria West Park (R. T. Kipling, master of ceremonies)—Costumes, Lorna Ash, Beatrice Pollard, Audrey Crossman, Albert Demoni, Larry Sutherland, Betty White, Barbara Warner, Johnnie Courville, Kenneth Appleby.

Many novel entertainments were presented at Brook and St. Charles Streets park, where W. A. Baylis was master of ceremonies. A witches' tent dispensed 300 sacks of candy, and included in the many amusements was a trial of Guy Fawkes, who was burned at the stake.

THREE MORE BRITISH SOLDIERS WOUNDED

today, running a blazing machine gun gauntlet to sanctuary in Shanghai's International Settlement.

At the height of a furious battle that sprayed shells over the foreign-owned areas of Central Shanghai, 377 Chinese dashed down a twenty-yard opening to safety.

They were disarmed immediately by British troops and interned for duration of the conflict. Twenty-six were gravely wounded.

FULFILLED THEIR PLEDGE

Chinese said they had left behind 200 dead who fulfilled their pledge to defend the warehouse until death in the face of a Japanese "surrender or die" ultimatum.

Ten minutes after the last survivor fled, Japanese hoisted the Rising Sun flag over the site of one of the most dramatic episodes in this struggle.

Colonel Hsieh Chin-Yuan, commander of the battalion, was the last to reach the safety of foreign protection.

He said the capitulation was on Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek's direct orders to evacuate because the battalion was "too valuable to spare."

SAVED THEIR COLORS

With them the escaping Chinese brought national and battalion flags that had fluttered above the warehouse through four days of pounding attacks since the general Chinese withdrawal from war-ravaged Chapei, across Soochow Creek from the International Settlement.

Shrapnel rained down in all directions while machine guns kept up a nerve-racking chatter. The Chinese defenders answered the attack all night with hand grenades and machine-gun fire.

Surrounding the structure on three sides, Japanese three-inch guns literally blasted the warehouse. The two floors burst into flames as the Chinese fled.

Three-inch shells fell in Shanghai's foreign section but small damage was reported.

The Japanese artillery attack menaced the nearby gasworks and its huge gas storage tank, endangering the lives of forty American marines patrolling the sector. Two shells struck the works but the tank remained unhit.

URGED TO GIVE UP

Foreign consuls-general, fearful the Japanese attack might cause damage to the settlement, had urged the Chinese to give up.

Chinese authorities declared the Chinese army's left wing still held Nanziang, strategic Nanking-Shanghai Railway point west of Shanghai, despite a three-day Japanese land and air bombardment that reduced the town to ruins.

A Japanese bomber was shot down and three flyers killed in South China when a Japanese squadron attempted to destroy the highway communications linking the port of Amoy with Changchow and Chinchew.

VATICAN CITY, Oct. 30 (AP).—Pope Pius returned to the Vatican by automobile today from Castel Gandolfo, where he had spent a long summer residence.

LEGISLATURE WILL RESUME

Victoria's Third Member Will Be Heard on Debate Tomorrow Afternoon

After a quiet first week, in which it was suggested in the House that the Province would test automobile drivers, and outside the House that half of the tolls may be lifted from the Pattullo Bridge, the Legislature will resume its sittings at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow. Mrs. Paul Smith (Liberal, Burrard), Alderman Dr. J. D. Hunter (Conservative, Victoria), and Harold E. Winch (C.C.F., Vancouver East) are to join in the main debate in that order.

It is unofficially expected that the coming week will exhaust the debate, and that the budget may be brought down early in the week after that.

TALK REORGANIZATION

Rumors of Cabinet change, revolving about long-announced intention to create a Department of Trade and Commerce, are current in circles close to the ministry, but have not been mentioned by spokesmen for the Government. William J. Assestine (Liberal, Atlin) has more than once been mentioned as a possible successor to Hon. G. S. Pearson in the portfolio of mines on the unofficial assumption that Mr. Pearson, now carrying three departments, may wish to lighten the load.

Decisions, however, will rest with Premier Pattullo, when and if reorganization of the Cabinet takes place. The Premier so far has said merely that a Department of Trade and Commerce would be created at this session, with charge also over tourist trade activities.

LITTLE LEGISLATION

In legislation, the House has before it Bill No. 1, being an amendment in the Landlords and Tenants Act, to change "and" for "or" in one clause of the existing measure. This was the measure used for ceremonial purposes on the first day.

The Liberal caucus will hold its next meeting on Monday evening. party whips have said.

PLAN MUCH WORK ON BOWKER CREEK

City, Oak Bay and Saanich to Join Forces Next Spring on Improvement Project

Action to improve Bowker Creek will be taken next Spring, it was decided yesterday morning at a joint meeting of city, Oak Bay and Saanich representatives held in the City Hall. Alderman Edward Williams, chairman of the City Council public works executive, presided. Oak Bay undertook to recommend that the culvert under Cadboro Bay Road be lowered to a level satisfactory to municipal engineers. The city accepted financial responsibility for similar work on the culvert under Poul Bay Road.

Saanich offered use of a steam shovel to assist Oak Bay in cleaning out the creek to improve the run-off. Those at the meeting thought the work contemplated next Spring would leave the creek in a satisfactory condition for several years.

Present besides Alderman Williams were Mayor Andrew McGavin, Aldermen T. W. Hawkins and John A. Worthington, and Gifford M. Irwin, councilor; William Ellis and A. S. G. Musgrave, municipal engineer, Oak Bay; Reeve William Crouch, councilors A. G. Lambick and John Watson, and H. Allen, municipal engineer, Saanich.

BOYCOTTING A NEWSPAPER

The Ardmore Social Credit group several weeks ago sent a communication to the editor of The Bonnycastle Nouvelle threatening a boycott of the paper because of its opposition to the Abernethian theories. Needless to say, the editor in question was not susceptible to intimidation of this character. The Nouvelle has suffered by the loss of one of the most consistent users of its advertising space through refusing to be a puppet of Social Crediters. That fact, however, has not deterred its stand. It still believes in the freedom of the Press and the liberty of speech and refuses to submit to the doctrine of support being extorted by intimidation, which is blackmail and nothing else.

One of the Abernethian policies is the suppression of the freedom of the Press. That is embodied in legislation, assent to which has been suspended by the Lieutenant-Governor of Alberta pending advice from the Governor-General-in-Council. The action of the Social Crediters of Ardmore is in line with Premier Aberneth's conception of what part the Press should play in the purposes of Social Credit. Similarly, the Albertan leader wants to make the banks his instrument. Dictator-like, he desires to harness all the forces there are to the chariot of his desire, and in the process to stifle freedom, infringe upon constitutional authority and destroy civil rights by closure of the courts to the people where the validity of his legislation is questioned.

Newspapers have been accused of misrepresenting the tenets of Social Credit. It is impossible to misrepresent a nebulousity. Social Credit has never been put into effect anywhere. Social Crediters resent opposition to their theories, and yet, if those theories were based on irrefutable fact, the long view would decree that any opposition should be regarded with amusement. The doctrine, however, is an extremely vulnerable one if the attitude of its supporters is any criterion, because the desire is to suppress criticism of its tenets. That is what the Social Crediters of Ardmore are attempting to do by blackmailing The Bonnycastle Nouvelle. There can be only one opinion entertained of those who have blackmail in their hearts.

THE BEST TALISMAN

When estimated from the standpoint of purely material happenings, each individual seems to tread round and round in the same narrow circle. With some, the preoccupation in the daily grind becomes so exacting that the impression gains headway that there is scarcely time for a thought of anything else. There is a tendency to become a slave to life's toils and tasks, its secularities and its struggles, and so there is a bending down to the things of earth, and the tears of sorrow dim the vision of heaven; the dust and smoke of mundane battles hide the blue infinity of the spiritual. For those so preoccupied the horizon is narrow; it is close and oppressive; there is no looking beyond, no giving scope to the vision to catch the glimpses of eternity.

Within each individual heart are the sources of happiness or wretchedness. With the inner experiences, properly disciplined, circumstances have but little to do; in this respect, too, the bugbear of environment is very much exaggerated. It is self, in its interpretation, that gives color to the skies, that gives the tone to the music in the heart; it is self that can be attuned to hear the sweet strains of song even in the loudest wailing of the storm. When, within oneself, what is seen and heard causes unhappiness and discontent, it is because of discontent, because of sadness in outlook, because of failure to appreciate the concord and euphony of the heavenly music. The Christian way of living is based on joyfulness in life. As one writer has put it, discontent is a detestable fault; morbidity is a sin; fretfulness grieves God; it tells of unbelief; it destroys the soul's peace; it disfigures the beauty of Christian character. The talisman in the Christian treasury of riches is contentment.

A politician, Mr. L. S. Amery, said not long ago: "I would welcome a return to an outlook more concerned with moral values than with material comfort." It is an undoubted fact that while the cares and claims of this transitory life fill the whole horizon, there must be a dwarfed perspective. That is the way to foster an unquiet mind, to lay emphasis on and to be perturbed by the little things that do not bulk at all in a boundless vista. So, where these claims and cares dominate life and make the individual their slave, it is impossible to see things sub specie aeternitatis, and yet when that is done, as it could be done by all, life itself and the affairs of the world take on wholly different proportions. For one thing, where there is faith in a boundless beyond there is a central hope which corrects the vision of all else. It is the hope that matters supremely, that preserves equilibrium of outlook, that inspires contentment, that gives the quiet mind, that keeps ever uppermost in the thoughts the ideal of striving to develop the best there is in the heart.

It is discontent that always takes the short view of life and its happenings. There is some cause for wonderment that so few, even preachers, lay stress on this virtue; even writers on ethics hardly give it a place in their conception of the moral ideal. The conception fostered now-a-days is that discontent is a necessary condition of progress. It is, from the purely material standpoint, because all efforts to improve circumstances spring from dissatisfaction with those that prevail. It is the way of reformers to excite their fellows by laying stress on the handicaps under which they labor, by telling them of the hardships they have to endure, by driving them to take action to improve their lot. In this process, however, sometimes the discontent promoted issues in the gravest moral confusion. So it is necessary to separate the conditions that are purely physical from those that are moral. In the latter sphere, contentment is a necessary ingredient in the effort to rely on principles rather than on things. Where there is too much concern with the latter, the moral judgment can be perverted and there can be failure to appreciate the spiritual values of life. When it is admitted that true happiness must be found within oneself, there can never be any bondage to circumstances, for there is confidence in the eternal outcome. There is, as well, in the confidence in spiritual grace, a desire to advance in the knowledge of truth and to achieve a higher standard of moral life. There is, in fact, an ideal towards which men are striving consciously. In progress they have a sense of insufficiency because they always feel they fall far short of victory, but that sense is in no wise discontent, for the very desire for triumph has its own happiness. The paradox of true contentment has been described as that which "desires more, because it already enjoys much, of the harmony of life, and, like a skilled musician who adds to the grandeur of what is already a pure and worthy melody, the contented mind attains a fuller experience of the joyous anthem of consciousness spiritual progress."

Those who have the talisman of contentment within their hearts know that all that makes life true, useful and happy can be justified by faith in the hereafter. It assures them that by looking within to the sources of spiritual strength derived from above there are no buffeting of fortune, no changing circumstances that can rob them of those satisfactions derived from confidence in their present possession of an eternal hope and its incentive to higher attainments. This is the talisman that gives the blessing of enduring peace in the mind. He who is adjusting himself to the spiritual world all around him wins a coherence of personality; life is guided by a deliberate principle; it is ever seeking the eternal in the temporal, and there is the progressive discovery of new treasures that are incorruptible. There is, through the processes of the talisman of contentment in the heart, an ever-developing endowment with the splendid energies of the life everlasting.

PROPAGANDA IN SCHOOLS

With all the tinnitulation of publicity about the revised curriculum of the educational system of British Columbia, nothing is said about a survey to ascertain what, if any, subversive propaganda is permeating the schools. There have been evidences to show that the seeds of Socialism, and even of Communism, are being sown in youthful minds. There is no more justification for this in an educational system than there is for endeavoring to infuse into education the tenets of Conservatism or Liberalism. The teaching profession, in its attitude towards the work it has to do, should be unbiased in every particular. It is a profession which is supposed to deal with established facts, not theories about political dispensations. It, moreover, is supposed to adhere strictly to the textbooks that are the basis of education.

School teachers are the employees of the State and as such should eschew political doctrines in any and all information they have to impart to the young. Whatever the political or economic theories they espouse are matters of personal determination; they possess no right whatever to attempt to shove these down the throats of the children given to their charge. The child of today in the schools may become the teacher of tomorrow, and if the seeds of Communism or Socialism are sown in its mind, it will endeavor to spread further seeds when it has the opportunity. There are Socialist teachers in our schools today, but they should be warned, and if necessary inhibited, from attempting to spread their doctrines among the youth. This is one of the most important and pressing aspects of the educational problem. It is one to which no attention has been paid by the educational authorities, and to that extent they have been recreant to an obvious duty, which is to expel sectional propaganda from the work of the teaching profession.

In the recent Ontario election the aggregate vote of the Communists, the Socialist-Laborites and the C.C.F. party showed notable declines. Each party suffered losses, indicating that their campaigns of education are making a dwindling appeal.

Note and Comment

By Sandham Graves

A legislature? Pooh! There is no legislature, today! Here by a flicker of the mind we are at Cameron Lake, where tree-tops look like giant spreading ferns in emerald tracery against a sapphire sky. The topmost branches of the Douglas firs are nearly linked together, 200 feet above the ground. The season is late Summer, and white butterflies, enchanted by the sun and swelling odors, are garlanding in fitful, wayward, elevator flights from base to tip, right up the trees. Stop here, and rest awhile.

Lie flat upon the ground and gaze up at the tree-tops, and at the sky beyond. It's like the iris of a camera's lens, opening and closing upon a vault of purest blue. See, there are puffy clouds like woolly lambs playing tag across the backdrop of the universe. A little to one side the branches part, and you can see 10,000 feet aloft, where mackerel clouds have crinkled a little piece of Heaven into pleats and tucks, to make a party dress, perhaps, against the coming of that lady of the skies, our moon. Higher still there is a windborne streak of saffron, where the sun's declining rays have caught the underside of vapors four miles above the ground.

The butterflies fly lower, searching out the cause of heady scents that swell up from cedar boughs. Little flecks of white, they dart into the shafts of sunlight that strike aslant down through the forest, and hover over branches that gently wave their outer plumes upon the scented air. The insect harvesters pass from sunlight to shade, and lead the eye to pleasing contrasts; to little worlds of secret enterprise, where red furry squirrels twirl their captured cones with neat dexterity.

Shining through the branches, with here a length in light and there a patch in shade, the trim, tall trunks of firs and cedars, hemlock and pine, glow russet, grey and lichened green, like tapering candles upon a mammoth birthday cake. Here is a stately stem 100 feet from bole straight upward to its nearest branch. Its crinkled bark spreads round about a generous girth in corrugated, fluted ridges, challenging the eye to trace a thousand mazy paths where white grubs creep, and where red-headed flickers hunt them with gay, cocksure abandon.

Here and there the cones come tumbling down, hastened by the squirrels, who shake the slender tips of boughs, like monkeys would the waving fronds of coco palms on some South Sea coral reef. The falling cones bring the eyes back to the ground, where miracles in verdant growth prepare a sumptuous setting for so magnificent a superstructure. Well has this been called Cathedral Grove, where nave and aisles, green carpeted with maidenhair and palmy ferns, lead to long vistas of surpassing grandeur.

Ah! One could worship in a place like this, where chideless sing anthea and tree-frogs chant impudent responses, vastly out of tune. Deep in the forest a grouse is booming on some fallen log, its beating wings drumming out a vibrant message that is heard and understood by creatures who have the privilege to call the woods their home. The sun is sinking slowly in the West. The evening breezes stir the fronds of ferns; until they seem to wave as Sudanese fanned ancient Pharaohs with the fronds of palms at Thebes.

Now the clouds are hurrying faster across the iris of our lens, away up above the tree-tops. The colors of a sunset, and you've seen them all before, are flashing gold and orange, pink and carmen, slate blue and grey out there in the West. Evening shadows gather fast, where hills cut off the sinking sun while it still is high up in the heavens. Our trees are turning to silhouettes before our eyes. Echoes and whistles gather along nave and aisles of this cathedral. Echoes, perhaps, of things man might have done, had he but taken vision by the hand when it came to woo him.

This is no place to be at night. The dark was man's first enemy; 'twas then he and his kind crouched shivering in caves, while sword-toothed raiders prowled on furs before the dying members of the fire, outside the dripping, moss-hung walls of their retreat. A mind and grey out there in the lake, where at the intake, swollen winter creeks have dwindled to the chattering, singing murmurs of a shallow brook. Above the willows at the western end, the clouds drive fast before an on-shore breeze; carrying colors of the dying sunset briefly over land, before they, too, turn grey and black.

The stars pop out; their pale and twinkling circles becoming fixed and golden as the night advances and the day retreats. The Dipper has a double meaning here: it stoops toward the hilltop as if it would lift up a ladle-full of beauty from the silhouetted trees along the topmost ridges. Cassiopeia is cut in twain, a single "V" aslant and nodding toward Polaris, as it has done perhaps since Time itself began.

Lights spring up along the margin of the lake. A motor car with yellow headlights weaves dots and dashes, lines and semi-circles around the curves of winding highways. Up on the railway track, a lamp is twinkling in and out, and in, as swinging it slows down its curving arc and beams at last, a minor star in this rich panoply of night. Now the final wonder of them all shall end this rambling journey—the moon peeps around the shoulder of a mountain and clear down the valley, as trees march backward up the slope against a moving screen of silver cloud.

RECOMMEND BOYCOTT OF JAPANESE GOODS

MELBOURNE, Oct. 30 (CP-Reuters).—The Australian Council of Trade Unions Friday recommended to its State branches that they boycott Japanese goods. The council also urged prohibition of exports of scrap iron to Japan and withdrawal of the ore concession at Yampi Sound, Western Australia, granted to Japanese operators.

The Observation Car

By THE EDITORIAL STAFF

He'll Fight Soon

Billy Buxton, Victoria's southpaw batter, will soon be back tossing leather. His broken left flipper, operated on seven months ago, is just about ready for battle. Billy told us Friday evening. The youngster is certainly keen for action, and he has visions of one of two "warm-up" bouts before stepping up against tough opposition. Buxton is slated to meet "Speedy" Dado next month. Dado was the boy on whom the local fisticuffler ruined his left hand in a whirlwind melee in which Buxton was given the call. Since that time Dado has been tossing lots of leather, while the local scrapper has been on the shelf. "It will be quite the reverse from the last time we met," Buxton said. "In that mix Dado had been out quite a while, and this time it will be me who has been out of action. But I think I can take him for all that," said Buxton, with a smile.—S.T.

So Why Not

Hats off to the magistrate who fined himself $2.50 in a Mainland court for a traffic violation. What we'd like to see now is a politician who carries out his pre-election promises; a doctor who will risk his own prescriptions, or a friendly advisor who will practice what he preaches.—W.I.P.

Preview—British Style

It has often been said that newspaper critics say nothing kind of the play or the film they preview and review. In London, Alexander Korda, British film magnate, now lets the public be his guide. He supplied the audience at a preview of "Knight Without Armour" with printed forms, asking them to fill in their opinion as regards the story, the cast, and the direction. The audience thereupon demanded to see more of one of the actors who had a minor part in the film. The system might not be a bad one to try in this country, particularly in the case of double bills, where the programme is long on entertainment value, but often short on plot and direction.—B.G.

Glancing Over Sport

The Grim Reaper stepped in suddenly and certainly without warning the other day and snatched away Bob Johnston, thirty-two years professional at the Seattle Golf Club. Bob was one of the most popular salaried players on the Coast. If not on the continent, I first met Bob as a caddy at the Oak Bay links many years ago, and the last time I was speaking to him was on the sixth fairway of the Alderwood Golf Club in Portland during the U.S. national amateur championship. He was among the gallery of 8,000 or 9,000 watching Johnny Goodman win his first national amateur crown. I met him on the links and left him on the links; a strange coincidence, especially when you consider so many Summers had elapsed. . . . When Henry Armstrong, colored fighter, kayoed Peter Sarro in the featherweight title bout the other night, Jockey Johnny Gilbert dropped $1,000. He gambled this match at odds of five to two. . . . Page Mr. Ripley. Here's one for him. Danny London, Brooklyn featherweight, who fights Leo Rodak in Chicago November 6, was born deaf and dumb. In a fight one night, an opponent hit Danny a terrific smack behind the ear. Now he can hear and is learning to talk fluently. . . . Eddie Brannick, secretary of the Giants, is visiting England and Europe. He's not going to Italy, for he says he has seen enough of the DIMAGGIO family already this year.—J.D.

Fumes in the Fizz

With infinite care a hospitable Cadboro Bay resident and his wife brewed six gallons of fizzy wine to serve with rich fruit cake to visitors during the festive season. Eventually the fragrant beverage was ready for the next process. The brewmaster stayed up late pouring his brew into twenty-four bottles with screw caps. After making allowance for escaping gas, he fondly contemplated his labor of love and retired for the night. Before daybreak his wife awakened with a start. She heard two loud crashes and believed two pictures in the dining-room had come adrift. Then followed a loud series of muffled explosions. The brewmaster thought it was a pre-Halloween serenade until he rushed into the kitchen. There he found his twenty-four bottles shattered by expanding gas and a deluge of wine all over the floor. Christmas was being celebrated with fruit cake, but no fizzy wine. . . . Our tobaccoist friend contends that borrowing money is not the same as borrowing trouble, as set forth in the old saw. You can still borrow trouble. . . . Horace, who tries his hand at sundry inventions, is finding the trouble with many new ideas is that some other person thought of them first.—G.P.

Letters to the Editor

No letter to the editor will be inserted except over the proper signature and address of the writer. This rule admits of no exception. No letter should exceed 500 words in length.

PAST AND PRESENT

Sir,—By comparing the past with the present we are able to measure human progress.

While passing a local public school recently, the bell rang for the children to form in lines for inspection and orderly entrance to their respective classrooms.

The rows of clean healthy children assembled in the spacious school grounds, banked with flowers, made a pleasing picture, upon which my eyes lingered until the last child entered the school, closely followed by the school doctor and nurse.

Lapsing into a reminiscent mood, a similar but very different scene of long ago came back to memory.

As a small boy, while passing a London East End Ragged School (well named), the bell rang, and, boy-like, I peered through the iron railings, and there stood rows of dirty, ragged and some bare-footed children.

Had it not been such a sad spectacle, it would have been comic, for there were boys, wearing swallow-tail coats and pants sizes too big for them, torn in places that revealed the fact that they were minus underclothes.

These children had no doctor or nurse to watch over their physical welfare; it was nobody's business to see that they were properly fed and warmly clad—"fallen sparrows."

These "wretched schools" were supererogated by the board schools, a step up, and from the board schools we have stepped up to our present splendid system of state free education.

We are told that there is less religion taught in modern schools, but it is a consolation to know that more Christianity is practised.

W. F. EMERY,

SOCIAL CREDIT'S WAY

Sir,—A letter appeared in your columns on Friday, October 22, criticizing a letter I had written which had appeared in a previous issue. I trust you will be kind enough to publish this answer.

Mr. Maurice, the writer of this criticism, asked "Where is the money coming from with which to pay the Social Credit dividend?" I will try to answer this as satisfactorily as possible. Social Credit dividends will be paid with new money, that is money which is not now in existence. This new money will be created in much the same way as new money is created now. This, cutting out all details, is the present method. When the Government wants more money than it can get by taxation (a constant procedure), unless it wants the money for a long period, it borrows it from the banks. The bank does not give it currency, that is dollar bills, but only credit. In actual fact it simply writes in its ledgers that the Government has a deposit. The banks only lend this money; the power to create, which, incidentally, was given to them by the Government, against the security of the real credit of the nation, which is its power to produce goods and services. Now the Government has to pay the bank interest on this loan!

Further, Mr. Maurice must realize that money is not wealth. It is only the reflection of wealth. Everyone knows that today we can produce, with machinery, many more goods than we have the money to pay for. That is why we have over-production and unemployment on the one side and people in need on the other. Under Social Credit the Government will take an accounting of all these goods which can be produced but cannot be sold—these are "real credit"—create credit against them, and from this credit account pay dividends to all the citizens of the country. They will create this money and give it to the citizens, interest free, just in the same way in which I explained above the banks do now in order to lend to the Government in return for interest.

The actual paying of the Social Credit dividend will be after this manner. Each month the Government will send each citizen a cheque drawn on the national credit account of the amount of the dividend, just as an employer pays wages. Any bank will cash such cheques and reimburse itself from the national credit account. Then people will be able to buy all the goods the national productive machinery can produce. This will give employment to all.

I have only given a bare outline. The many subsidiary details necessary to make this system work safely and efficiently can be studied in pamphlets, which will be sent on application to R. J. Aitken, 36 Macdougall Street, or better still in the ABC of Social Credit by E. S. Holt.

A. S. AVERILL,

THE FOUNDATION OF TRUTH

Sir,—I feel constrained to recall to your mind and consideration a quotation from your recent editorial, "Eternity in Their Hearts." The passage reads thus: "It is not enough to long for the heavenly vision, but to be obedient to it, and strive to realize it. Good resolves are insufficient unless there is the determination to set out and make them come true." This is very true, Mr. Editor. Why not take and act on your own advice. There are many today who are pledged, under God, to do their utmost to the same end.

The Son of Man gave that heavenly vision to the world nearly two thousand years ago. In fact, He came to establish on earth that very state, for He said, "I am come that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly"—John 1, 10. You may assert that the Christ referred to a spiritual state of mind only.

at the races is quite lawful, and I am told the Government takes a percentage of the profits thereof. A man may gamble on the stock exchange, make a few thousands or a million maybe, ruin hundreds, ruin thousands of people, in so doing, and he is a fine fellow, yet the same paradoxical set-up makes it unlawful for a poor man to buy a lottery ticket, the latter being no evil at all in comparison to the lawful racket mentioned above. When opposition found its way into Eden, it was expelled. Note that Mr. Editor, and the Kingdom closed for about six thousand years. We are nearing the end of the long pilgrimage. Every tree bears its own fruit, and that of good and evil has been all too prolific. You will at once see, Mr. Editor, that our toppling edifice cannot, will not, must not, be repaired; for its very foundations are being swept away by Him Who is Truth. The foundation of truth is already laid. Where are the builders?

YOUNG PESSIMIST

An example of youthful pessimism was provided by a youngster who was about to start on a railway journey. It was the first time he had traveled alone, and his mother told him to write his name and address on a card and keep it in his pocket. He wrote: "In case of accident this was Johnny Jones."

FIFTY YEARS AGO TODAY

(From The Daily Colonist of October 31, 1887.)

From Cassiar—John Grant, M.P.P., arrived from Cassiar by the Huxley Anson yesterday. He reports that mining districts 10 days' journey from the coast are now producing gold in large quantities. Little prospecting had been done, and as a consequence, no new fields were discovered. No definite reports had been received from Lorne Creek, but it was understood that in several claims a fair yield had been secured.

Local Briefs—The popular station agent at Duncan has accepted a position on the C.P.R. Capt. John Irvine yesterday sent a live young fawn to Government House as a present to His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor. . . . The sale of the contractor's plant at the dry dock has been postponed until next Wednesday at 11 a.m. King's house will leave Campbell's corner at 4 a.m., conveying intending bidders to the sale.

An Immense Potato—Some of the Eastern exchanges have been chronicling the receipt of two-pound potatoes, but the largest we have seen is one grown by W. Chas. Shuswap Lake, thirty-five miles east of Kamloops, which weighed 3 1/2 pounds. It consists of five arms branching from the centre, and is certainly a giant tuber.

Britain Will Honor Empire's War Dead In Solemn Service

His Majesty and Representatives of Church and State Will Attend Great Ceremony in London on Armistice Anniversary

LONDON, Oct. 31 (P).—Great Britain will pause for two minutes again this November 11 as the King and a great company of his ranking liegemen of church and state gather at the cenotaph in tribute to the Empire's 1,000,000 "glorious dead."

The ceremony is to be the same as established in 1920 when the Cenotaph was unveiled by George V, with whom the solemn service is imperishably linked in the country's memory.

BY KING'S REQUEST

It is announced the King has requested the ceremony this year be not changed. Representative detachments of the Royal Navy, the Army, the Royal Air Force, the Merchant Navy and Fishing Fleets, and the Ex-Servicemen's Associations will march through the Horse Guards Arch into Whitehall and form a hollow square around the Cenotaph.

Shortly before 11 a.m. wreaths will be deposited by or on behalf of the King and other members of the Royal Family, and by representatives of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom and the Dominions, India and Burma, the Colonies and Protectorates, and of the Navy, the Army, the Air Force, and the Merchant Navy and Fishing Fleets.

BIG BEN SIGNALS

At 11 a.m. the two minutes' silence will be ushered in by the measured striking of the hour on Big Ben, standing aloft in its tower over Westminster, just a block away.

At the conclusion of the silent homage there will be a short service conducted by the Bishop of London. Representative detachments will thereafter move off and then will start the steady procession of official deputations bearing wreaths to the base of the Cenotaph.

Arrangements are also being made so that the public may pass through Westminster Abbey and beside the grave of the Unknown Warrior. There will be a special service in the Abbey at 10:30.

Thus, nineteen years after the Great War, will the heart of the Empire renew in reverent prayer and thankful praise her memory of the 1,000,000 dead—of the 744,702 men of Great Britain, of the 56,625 of Canada and of the 146,696 who journeyed to Flanders Fields from other parts of the British Commonwealth.

LORD MOUNTBATTEN SAYS HOME RAIDED

LONDON, Oct. 30 (P).—Lord Louis Mountbatten, a cousin of King George, today disclosed two mysterious night-time raids within a week on his luxurious apartment. On the second intrusion, Thursday night, the marauder escaped over rooftops after waking Lord Mountbatten's thirteen-year-old daughter, Patricia, by turning his flashlight into her room from a porch. Nothing was stolen.

CITY ALDERMEN ENTER CONTEST

T. W. Hawkins and S. H. Okell Seek Return to Council in December

Aldermen T. W. Hawkins and S. H. Okell announced yesterday they would seek re-election to the City Council in December. Aldermen Edward Williams and R. A. C. Dewar previously stated they would enter the contest. Mayor Andrew McGavin has not yet announced his intentions. The only other seat to fill is the one-year term being rounded out by Alderman W. T. Straith, who is retiring.

Alderman Hawkins is a member of the finance and legislative, water, relief, B.C. Electric franchise and Victoria-Saanich beaches and Parks committees. He is also a member of the public works executive, a fire warden, chairman of the seventy-fifth anniversary, and decorations and illuminations committees. He serves on the court of revision of the assessment roll and voters' list.

MANY COMMITTEES

As chairman of the anniversary celebration committee, Alderman Hawkins saw that all events were completed well within the budget. Through co-operation of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, he was able to carry out his idea of decorating city streets with strings of colored globes. He brought to a successful conclusion the replacement of obsolete arc lights with powerful globes, a change estimated to produce a saving of $15,000 next year. He is a member of more council committees than any other alderman.

"I make no promises, except that I will continue to actively devote my full time to city matters as I have done in the past," Alderman Hawkins stated. "Many important problems face the City Council next year, and I am ready and willing to continue shouldering my share of burdens to be placed on the mayor and aldermen," he added.

Is Photographed In New Gown as Doctor of Laws

PREMIER Pattullo was photographed in his office at the Legislative Buildings yesterday in the ceremonial scarlet and blue robe of an honorary Doctor of Laws, topped off by the traditional round blue beaver hat and cord. The Premier put on his gown for a moment while Cabinet colleagues called to congratulate him on the honor bestowed on him by the University of British Columbia.

This year Alderman Okell is rounding out a two-year term on the council. He is chairman of the Aged and Infirm Men's Home and pound committees, a member of the parks, street lighting and business and trade development committees, and a council representative to the Publicity Bureau. He is also a member of the intermunicipal, special wage committees and the court of revision of the assessment roll.

MADE PROMISE

"When elected to the council two years ago I promised that I would serve the city to the best of my ability. This I have done, and it is on this record that I seek re-election," Alderman Okell stated yesterday.

"I learned that management of the city is a very big and complicated business with many angles to it. I also learned powers and jurisdiction of a city council are limited. During my term of office I have given all questions careful consideration and acted as my conscience dictated. This will always be my policy as long as I am in public life," he asserted.

Nominations for council and school board seats will close at the City Hall at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of December 2. Voters will go to the polls on December 9.

ASK SUBSIDIES FOR FERRY RUN

Provincial Grants From $28,000 to $40,000 Are Sought by Tenderers

Subsidies, ranging from $28,000 to $40,000, were asked of the Provincial Government yesterday for five years operation of the Agassiz-Rosedale ferry on the Fraser River in tenders opened by Hon. F. M. MacPherson. The tenders, with subsidies asked on an annual basis, were reported as follows: H. Hill, subsidy of $8,000; A. W. Dickinson, subsidy of $6,800; and J. T. Henley, subsidy of $3,600. All bids were referred for report.

The present charter holder is J. T. Henley. Five-year renewal of contract for continued operation of the ferry will likely go to the lowest bidder when contract is awarded.

Obituary

WHITE—There passed away yesterday, at the Royal Jubilee Hospital, Mrs. Sarah Ellen White, widow of George White, who predeceased her in 1935. Mrs. White, who was eighty-two years of age, was born in Nottingham, Eng., and came to this city eighteen years ago from Calgary. She leaves to mourn her passing four sons, Albert, at the family residence, 450 Davida Avenue; William, at 444 Davida Avenue; John and Edward, of Payton, Sask., and one daughter, Mrs. A. Sasty, Prince Albert, Sask. The remains are resting at the S. J. Curry & Son Funeral Home. Announcement of the funeral will be made later.

EMERY—There passed away in Bedford, England, on October 9, Mrs. J. Emery, who for many years was a resident of Victoria. Her husband, who survives her, was a petty officer in the Royal Canadian Navy, making his headquarters in Victoria. Following his retirement, with his wife and members of the family he removed to England. Mrs. Emery was fifty-two years of age, and has one daughter residing here, Mrs. Henry Harris, whose home is on Cloverdale Avenue in Saanich. Other members of the family surviving are Miss Ruth Emery and John Emery, who both reside at home.

JENKINS — At the family residence, yesterday, there passed away Mrs. Rosamond Jenkins, wife of Charles Edward Jenkins, 1020 Fairfield Road. Born in Gibraltar, Mrs. Jenkins had been a resident of this city for the past twenty-five years. She is survived by her husband, one son, Oliver George, Portland, Ore.; two daughters, Miss Elsie Jenkins, at home, and Mrs. Owen Fowler, 1039 Sutcliffe Street; one sister, Mrs. H. Y. Smith, Vancouver. Funeral services will be held in Sands Mortuary, Ltd., on Tuesday at 2 o'clock. Rev. Robert Connell will officiate, and the remains will be laid at rest in Royal Oak Burial Park.

DUNCAN — The death occurred yesterday, at her residence, 1639 Hampshire Road, of Mrs. Sophia Duncan, widow of Thomas Wallace Duncan, Seaforth, Ontario, and the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Budd, Guelph, Ontario. In her eighty-third year, she was born in North Stoneham, Hampshire, England; came to Canada seventy-five years ago, and for the last twenty-three years had been living in Victoria. Mrs. Duncan was, until taken ill a year or so ago, a very active worker for St. Mary's Church, Oak Bay. She leaves to mourn her loss, her daughter, Miss M. E. Duncan, at home; one sister, Mrs. John Goldie, Toronto, and four grandchildren at Brentwood Bay. The remains are resting in Hayward's B.C. Funeral Chapel, and the funeral will be tomorrow afternoon, the cortege leaving the chapel at 2:15 and proceeding to St. Mary's Church, where services will be conducted at 2:30 by Ven. Archdeacon Nunn, assisted by Rev. Canon Chadwick. Interment will be made in the family plot in Royal Oak Burial Park.

GUSH—The funeral of Mrs. Eliza Gush will be held from Hayward's B.C. Funeral Chapel Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. T. Keyworth conducting the service. Interment will be made in Royal Oak Burial Park.

O'BRIEN—The funeral of John Thomas O'Brien will take place on Monday. The remains will be removed today from Sands Mortuary, Ltd., to Our Lady of Lourdes Church, The Willows, where, at 8 o'clock to-

YOURIST WINS FEATURE BOUT

Defeats O'Shocker by Odd Fall—McIntyre Defeats
Freeman

Awarded deciding fall on a foul, Abe Yourist, Jewish matman from New York's East Side, won the main event of last night's wrestling show at the Tillamook gymnasium, with an odd-fall triumph over rugged Patrick O'Shocker, St. Louis pachyderm.

Yourist gained the first fall in the second round when O'Shocker decided he was getting the worst of it and asked Referee Johnny Peas, who was underhand both wrestlers, to tap Yourist on the back. After a quiet third round, O'Shocker went to work in the next session. He picked up Yourist and draped him over the ring supports two or three times and then finished him with a back-breaker and a press. It was while the New Yorker was still on the canvas that O'Shocker committed the foul and Peas immediately awarded Yourist the deciding fall and the match. Yourist weighed 220 pounds and O'Shocker 243 pounds.

Donald McIntyre, Scottish heavyweight, defeated "Little" Herb Freeman, 265-pound New Yorker, in straight falls in the semi-windup, after a wild, exciting bout. Freeman, master showman, put on a grand show, and McIntyre, poker-faced Scot, did most of the wrestling. The first fall came in the third round after McIntyre had taken plenty of punishment and the bout ended in the next session. McIntyre weighed 220 pounds.

Kimono Kudo, clever Japanese jiu-jitsu wrestler, spotted Dick Raines, Dallas, Texas, sixty-six pounds and scored a straight-fall triumph. The pair wrestled in the jackets for the first fall, with Kudo applying the "choke" hold in the second session. In the fourth the Japanese matman was awarded the second fall on a foul. Raines weighed 233 pounds and Kudo 170.

HALLOWE'EEN FULL OF FUN

irate householder informed police that thirty feet of his fence had been removed. That, at a late hour, was seemingly the most serious damage done.

There were some oldersters who contended it wasn't the celebration they had enjoyed in their younger days, but their children and grandchildren made the most of it for all that. They enjoyed the treat of staying up late, coupled with the privilege of getting into mischief without reproof, provided that it was mischief of not too serious a nature.

AUTUMN'S GREAT EVENT
To the smaller children, as well as to many in their teens, it was, of course, the great event of Autumn, only exceeded by Christmas. There were merry little parties in many houses throughout the city, where, after a bonfire and the inevitable crackers had been enjoyed, the youngsters gathered indoors to play games and eat popcorn, candy and apples.

Those more grown up enjoyed organized parties, and there was many a gay private dance, where masquerade costumes were worn.
Householders kept their porch lights burning until well after midnight in the majority of cases. Roaming groups of youngsters played the old "shell-out" game; always a favorite on Halloween, and demanded ransom. Pockets in many cases were not big enough to hold the treasures obtained by these juvenile buccaners. Some carried sacks, while one resident of Fairfield district reported he had been visited by a group of three fantastically garbed kiddies who placed their gifts of sweets, fruit and the like in a pillowcase.

EXTRA POLICE OUT
For police throughout the greater part of the city, the evening had its trials. In the city extra patrolmen were kept on duty, with extra equipment to take care of any eventuality that might arise.

There seemed a larger Saturday crowd than usual downtown during the day. Many of them bought seasonal dainties and favors, while Chinese vegetable stores did an outstanding business in bombs, crackers, sparklers, rockets, Catherine wheels and vari-colored flares.

In the evening pedestrian and car traffic seemed to reach its peak about 10:30. Traffic lights were kept operating until well after 11 o'clock.

twelve months. This would give practically everyone a chance to participate in the welfare work being done by the twenty-three organizations which are making their annual appeal through the Community Chest.
"We do hope that the public will quickly learn that our headquarters are in the Union Building at the corner of View and Government Streets, and that our telephone number is Empire 8832. The public can find us in this way any hour of the day. Someone will be constantly in attendance at the office to answer any questions, give information, and receive donations. Naturally there will be many people who may find it more convenient to call there than have the canvassers call at their homes. Any who give their donations through the office will be given stickers to take home to paste on some window in a conspicuous place where the canvasser will be able to see it. This will save the canvasser the trouble of calling."

"All we ask is sympathetic and courteous co-operation in this, Victoria's first Community Chest campaign, which, it is well to remind people, falls in the seventy-fifth anniversary year of the city's incorporation," Mr. Winslow stated.

WORKERS ENTHUSIASTIC

Something of the same idea was echoed by Fred M. McGregor, joint chairman, with R. H. B. Ker, of the campaign.
"Every worker is most enthusiastic, and we are quite confident that practically every group—industrial, municipal, educational, governmental, residential, or employee—will secure its allotment and realize its objective," Mr. McGregor said in his final pre-campaign statement to The Colonist.

Many interesting stories are being received indicating a sympathetic attitude on the part of the public to the Community Chest campaign. From the several at hand is selected the incident of a golf caddy who volunteered the sum of $5 from his small earnings. He had thought the matter over and decided that it was a worthy cause which should have his support.

against workers in other countries.
"The United States will not be happy until they get an ingress to the British market in terms of free entry," he said. "You'd better keep your eyes on the Government at Ottawa."

SUPPORT GREAT BRITAIN
Mr. Bennett appealed to the meeting for support for Great Britain's rearmament programme. He said the British Empire had attempted to disarm, but had been forced to change that policy when it found every other great nation building up its military, naval and aerial strength.

"Britain is not arming for war, but to maintain its prestige and authority so it may help keep peace in the world," he said. "Chaos would immediately ensue if it were not for the stabilizing influence of the tiny British Isles."

"We, in the Overseas Dominions, are reaping the benefit of Great Britain's preparedness."

SASKATCHEWAN RELIEF

Mr. Bennett commented briefly on administration of unemployment relief in Saskatchewan.
"I commented once before that the Liberal Government was taking advantage of relief payments in Saskatchewan to develop its political machine," he said.
"Mr. Gardiner (Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Federal Minister of Agriculture) said I was wrong, and that the relief administration in that province was handled by the municipalities."

"I say now, in answer to Mr. Gardiner, that the municipality in Saskatchewan is the basis of the Liberal political machine."

Mr. Bennett urged delegates present to iron out their petty differences and "let the majority viewpoint in the party have precedence."

ELECTION OF OFFICERS

John H. Morgan, of New Westminster, last year's first vice-president and organizing chairman of the British Columbia Conservative Association, today was elected president of the association.
Mr. Norman succeeds Robert A. Wootton, of Victoria, who earlier had said he wished to retire. The election was unanimous.

Mayor T. A. Love, of Grand Forks, was elected first vice-president; R. D. Harvey, president of the Victoria Conservative Association, was named second vice-president; Mrs. S. R. Bowden, of Esquimalt, third vice-president; Ald. Halford D. Wilson, of Vancouver, fourth vice-president; H. W. Galbraith, of Vernon, fifth vice-president; Mrs. Mary Campbell, of Vancouver, sixth vice-president, and Miss Janet Gille, of New Westminster, secretary.

ADOPT RESOLUTIONS

The association adopted the recommendation of the resolutions committee headed by Hon. Grote Stirling, referring to Dr. Frank Patterson a resolution protesting the sale of British Columbia natural resources to foreign interests.
Dr. Patterson, provincial party leader, was asked to consider the resolution as part of the Conservative policy.
The resolution did not refer definitely to nationals of any individual nation. Delegates said later they considered it referred primarily to sales of timber stands on the Queen Charlotte Islands to Japanese interests, and to Japanese development of mineral deposits throughout the province, especially iron.

City and District

Oak Bay Dwelling—C. A. and S. L. Williams have taken out a permit for the erection of a five-roomed dwelling, valued at $2,200, which is to be built at 2167 Central Avenue.

Court of Appeal—The final sitting for the year of the Court of Appeal will open in Vancouver on Tuesday next. The first sitting of the court for 1938 will open in Victoria on Tuesday, January 11.

Car Stolen—A blue 1937 Chevrolet sedan, licence number 15-252, belonging to Alex T. Stewart, 1711 Leighton Road, was stolen from in front of The Colonist office early last evening, police report.

Cycle Damaged—A cycle ridden by Terry Graham, 1029 McCaskill Street, was damaged at 5:30 last evening in a collision with a car driven by Sue Smith, 1405 Store Street, at the corner of Johnson and Store Streets, city police report.

Goods Stolen—One dozen Bahr tooth brushes, a dozen pocket combs and two dozen tins of licorice candies were stolen from a car belonging to S. Dunc yesterday afternoon, while it was parked in the 700 Block, Pandora Avenue, police were informed last night.

Hurt by Firecracker—Dorothy Robertson, twelve, of 1212 Princess Avenue, sustained burns to her right hand at 8:20 last evening, when a firecracker she was handling exploded. She received first aid at the police station and was later taken home by her parents.

Cars Collide—Cars driven by Danny Barrieau, 3408 Cook Street, and Wilfred Kendall, 715 Catherine Street, collided at 11 o'clock Friday night at the corner of Johnson and Quadra Streets. According to city police, both cars were damaged, but no one was injured.

Oak Bay Voters—G. F. Salmon, secretary of Oak Bay Conservative Association, announced last night that he had received a complete list of Dominion voters for Oak Bay. Those persons wishing information in this matter may obtain same by telephoning Mr. Salmon at Empire 6140.

Building in Saanich—Among the houses that will be built in Saanich, included among the seven permits totaling $5,000 which were taken out in the past week, are a $2,400 home tions, instead of referring the matter to the various Provincial Governments for their opinions and advice.

"What value are the recommendations, the opinions of five irresponsible, in the governing of the 11,000,000 people in Canada," he asked.

"Dominion-Provincial relations are not a matter for judges, for the responsibilities and powers of the various governing bodies are clearly defined in the British North America Act."

"Instead, they are a political matter, and always have been."

"No amendment of our constitution can be made except by the Parliament at Westminster, for the Statute of Westminster makes special provision for that."

"Westminster will only act on the request of the Dominion Government. Unless that Government intends to force amendments through without consulting the provinces, the Royal Commission's recommendations will have to be submitted to the respective Provincial Legislatures for their approval."

"If they turn down the recommendations, what will happen then?"

Mr. Bennett did not answer the question he had posed. Then he asked two more.

"Did you give the Dominion Government a mandate to name the commission? What is your Legislature for?"

In contrast, he mentioned the revision of the British North America Act accomplished by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1907.

"Sir Wilfrid wanted to improve Dominion-Provincial relations," Mr. Bennett said. "He called a conference of all the provinces. Recommendations of that conference were forwarded to Westminster, where they were approved."

"There were no irresponsible men that time, but Governments elected by the people of Canada," he ended.

COUNCIL TO MEET MONDAY EVENING

A meeting of the City Council finance committee, headed by Alderman Dr. J. D. Hunter, will be held at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning to draw up a report for presentation to the council at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Details of negotiations with Oak Bay and Saanich to remove the possibility of Bowker Creek flooding in heavy rains will be presented by Alderman Edward Williams.

A report on the necessity of painting a no-parking strip on both sides of Quadra Street, near Tolmie Avenue, will be discussed.

"TIRED" ALL THE TIME

She felt miserable—drugs—low in vitality—liver in spirits. She hadn't thought of her kidneys, until a friend suggested Dodd's Kidney Pills. At once she took Dodd's. The "washed out" feeling was soon replaced by clear-headed energy and renewed sleep. Headache, backache, lethargy and other signs of faulty kidneys disappeared.

Miss Carol Puckle and Mr. E. Goodall Married

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Scene of Pretty Wedding Last Evening—Bride and Groom Will Live in Esquimalt

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, with a beautiful arrangement of warm-toned chrysanthemums and autumn foliage, was the setting of a smart wedding last evening at 8:30 o'clock, when Carol Victoria, elder daughter of Mrs. Henry Kaye Puckle, 2106 Granite Street, and of the late Mr. Puckle, became the bride of Mr. Edward Goodall, elder son of Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Goodall, Fitzroy House, Wells, Somerset, England.

Rev. Peter McNabb conducted the impressive ceremony, and Mr. Jesse Longfield presided at the organ.

RADIANT BRIDE

The radiant bride, who was given away by Mr. A. Kaye, Vancouver, her father's cousin, wore a slim-fitting frock of ivory satin with a long train and long pointed sleeves which were attached to a yoke of lace. The waist was finished with a narrow satin belt fastened with a rhinestone buckle. Her veil of finest bridal net, which had been worn by the bridegroom's mother at her wedding, was arranged beneath a coronet of orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses, white carnations and bouvardia, showered with swansons.

Miss Doris Puckle was her sister's only bridesmaid, in a redingote frock of eau de Nile point d'esprit over matching moire. The elbow-sleeved coat was bound with a narrow band of the moire, and a bow of the same material gave a finishing touch to the neck of the frock. Her sandals were of moire and she wore a bandeau of single broad chrysanthemums on her head and carried a bouquet of the same variety, Brown's Buckingham.

Mr. Harry Sparks was best man, and escorting the guests to their pews, which were tied with bouquets of chrysanthemums, were Mr. Denis Hagar and Mr. Percy Ridgway Wilson.

HOSTESS AT RECEPTION

Mrs. Puckle, wearing a handsome gown of black chiffon velvet adorned with a corsage spray of Talisman roses and a black velvet toque and veil, was hostess at a reception, at her home after the service, where masses of autumn flowers were effectively arranged. The bride and groom stood between baskets of white chrysanthemums and dahlias to receive their friends, and to the accompaniment of the usual toasts she later cut the cake, which was surmounted by a vase of roses.

Mr. and Mrs. Goodall left by the midnight boat for Vancouver, and after their wedding trip will make their home at Monica Court, Esquimalt Road. The bride went away in a smart Harris tweed suit and coat and brown accessories, and wore a corsage spray of Talisman roses.

Prof. F. H. Soward to Speak Here Tomorrow

Professor F. H. Soward, of the Department of History at the University of British Columbia, will lecture on Monday at 8:15 p.m. in the auditorium of the Central Junior High School. The subject of the lecture will be "The Background of the Far Eastern Crisis." Professor Soward is one of the best-informed Canadians on current affairs. This is the first of the series of University Extension lectures to be held this season.

A Smartly Simple Blouse

You'll delight in wearing this wonderfully flattering blouse. It makes such a smart costume worn with a pencil slim skirt. The long fitted line will give you a slinky, sophisticated appearance and a new low waistline. Another important feature is the demure shirring that moulds the bosom, also very attractive with a zipper closing. The model gives you two ways to finish the neck... V or shirred high at the throat. The graceful short, shirred sleeves have slimming bands. Another version with slightly full shoulder sleeves in short and wrist length is also included. It's conservatively smart in rayon crepe. For cocktail parties and evenings, white satin or silver metal fabrics give it a youthful formal character. Style No. 3153 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years; 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. Size 36 requires one and one-half yards of 39-inch material.

The Fall and Winter Fashion Book is filled with lovely designs for everyday wear, which are easy and inexpensive to make.

Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. William Tomes, 3256 Millgrove Street, celebrated their silver wedding on Thursday in Alex' Hall, Burnside Road. A six-piece orchestra played the dance music, and bridge was played by some of the non-dancers. Mr. Robert Brydon proposed a toast to Mr. and Mrs. Tomes, which was seconded by Mr. John Paterson. The guests of honor were presented by Mr. George Wells, on behalf of their friends, with a beautiful silver tea set. Supper was served during which time Mr. James Matheson sang several selections. Mrs. Tomes received a bouquet of yellow and white chrysanthemums, presented by Miss Maureen Pecknold. The invited guests were Mr. and Mrs. E. Eastham, Mr. and Mrs. D. Vallance, Mr. and Mrs. G. Vallance, Mr. and Mrs. J. Paterson, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. V. Pecknold, Mr. and Mrs. G. Wille, Mr. and Mrs. T. Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. J. Matheson, Mr. and Mrs. A. Playfair, Mr. and Mrs. Derbyshire, Mr. and Mrs. A. Porter, Mr. and Mrs. R. Brydon, Mr. and Mrs. Tupperman, Mr. and Mrs. Mackenzie, Mr. and Mrs. H. Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. J. McNell, Mr. and Mrs. J. Macleod, Mr. and Mrs. T. Scarff, Mr. and Mrs. W. Mobey, Mr. and Mrs. W. Ralph, Mr. and Mrs. S. Eden, Mr. and Mrs. J. Berryman, Mr. and Mrs. D. Hoare, Mrs. W. Hanson, Mrs. R. Huddleston and Mrs. A. Macgregor, Misses Jean Porter, Edith Scarff, Audrey Hanson, Mary Taylor, June Oliver, Phyllis Deveson, Iris Vallance, Gwen Hanson, Maureen Pecknold, Isabelle Tomes and Phyllis Tomes, Messrs. "Steamer" Carried Gifts

Miss Lillian Sadler was hostess recently at her home on Seymour Avenue at a miscellaneous shower in compliment to Miss Edna Ashton, a popular bride-to-be. Large white chrysanthemums made effective decorations in the living-room. Upon her arrival, Miss Ashton was given a lovely corsage bouquet of pink carnations and fern, tied with a big pink bow. The many pretty gifts were concealed in a "steamer" cleverly made of white crepe paper with red paper "funnels." Games and contests were enjoyed, the winners being Mrs. N. Wilkinson, Miss Mary Heatley, Mrs. E. Parker and Mrs. W. Ashton. Supper was served towards midnight. A miniature bridal group formed the centerpiece for the supper table, while mauve chrysanthemums in small silver vases were set around them. Pink streamers completed this charming bridal motif. Those present were Mrs. L. Harmon, Mrs. T. J. Sadler, Mrs. W. Ashton, Mrs. N. Wilkinson, Mrs. V. Berryman, Mrs. T. Hurly, Mrs. P. Luscombe, Mrs. E. Parker, Mrs. Fraser, Mrs. Stephens and Miss Ruby Bullock, Mary Heatley, Mary Reid, K. Caldwell and Kathleen Hill.

Coming-of-Age Party

An enjoyable evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Moras, Belton Street, to celebrate their daughter Tiesse's coming-of-age. The table was beautifully decorated with tall vases of bronze chrysanthemums and centred by a birthday cake. The evening was spent in card and games, winners being Mrs. J. Denomi, Mrs. O. Guelpa, Messrs. D. Guelpa and Misses L. Denomi, G. Johnson, D. Hill, K. Thornton and G. Hamilton. Later dancing was enjoyed, also solos, with piano accompaniment by Albert Denomi. The invited guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. Denomi, Mr. and Mrs. L. Denomi, Mr. and Mrs. O. Guelpa, Mr. and Mrs. A. De Grolama, Mr. and Mrs. A. Segnani, Mrs. Hasenfratz, Mrs. F. Paone, Misses D. Hill, A. Moras, J. Armstrong, A. Paradi, G. Johnson, L. Ericson, S. Rodman, K. Thornton, F. Hasenfratz, D. Guelpa, T. Moras, Messrs. G. Hamilton, D. Armstrong, A. Denomi, A. De Grolama, N. Paone, W. Thornton, W. Whitehead, G. Denman and W. Earl.

Gifts in "Cauldron"

Miss Ruth Peake, a November bride-to-be, was honored last night when Miss Evelyn Hudson and Miss Joan Peake entertained at a kitchen shower at the home of Mrs. D. Kellie Bell, 958 Victoria Avenue. Halloween decorations were used in the reception rooms together with masses of chrysanthemums. The many useful gifts were presented in a "witch's cauldron" moulded of black crepe paper. Bridge was played during the evening. Later a buffet supper was served from a table centred with bronze chrysanthemums in a silver basket and lighted by orange and black candles in silver sconces. Mrs. D. K. Bell presided. The guests were Mrs. William Edgar, Mrs. R. Clever, Mrs. D. Kellie Bell, and Misses Mona Rickaby, Helen Wells, Jean Gilley, Ella Dryden, Mary Hudson and Beth Pollock.

This lovely little girl is Yselt Elizabeth, three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Guppy, Port Alberni, V.I., and granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. A. Jones, Port Alberni, formerly of Moose Jaw and Winnipeg. The paternal grandfather is Mr. R. F. B. L. Guppy, Tofo, V.I., late of the Indian Civil Service.

Party for Brides

Mrs. John Knowles, 1052 Topas Avenue, entertained at her home on Friday afternoon in honor of three recent brides, Mrs. John McLennan (nee Newham), Mrs. Wilfred Schroeder (nee Mountain) and Mrs. Daniel Rigg (nee Cookman). The tea table, spread with a lace cloth, was centred with a wedding cake prettily decorated and surrounded by pink tapers in pink holders stood at either side of the cake, and at each corner of the table stood a miniature bride and groom. Gladioli and chrysanthemums were arranged in the living-room. Other guests were Mrs. W. Newham, Mrs. J. Mountain, Mrs. T. Cairns, Mrs. A. Cookman and Mrs. Edwin Jones.

Receive Gifts

Miss Roberta Peden was hostess on Friday night at her home on Oscar Street to members of her bridge club. During the evening the presentation of lace tablecloths to Miss Elaine Ross and Miss Genevieve Madden, who are to be married shortly, took place. Supper was served in the dining-room, the table having an attractive Halloween motif. The table was centred with laurel leaves, upon which sat a pumpkin filled with various fruits and rainbow colored flower lights. Novelty place cards, favors and bonbons completed the arrangements. Those present were Miss Elaine Ross, Miss Genevieve Madden, Miss Ruth Windau, Miss Agnes Nesbitt, Miss Dorothy Basanta, Mrs. J. Cunningham and Mrs. T. Ricardo.

Party for Bride and Groom-to-be

Miss Millie Miller and Mr. Alwyn Trace, who are to be married on November 5, were the guests of honor at a miscellaneous shower recently at the home of Miss Holmes, Dysart Road, when she and Miss Marjorie Woolley were hostesses. The gifts were concealed in a gaily decorated Halloween box. Whist was played and prizes were won by Miss Laura Trace, Miss Beth Trace, Mr. Bob Whittan and Mr. Frank Miller. A buffet supper was served and the guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. Shaw, Misses Nora Weeks, Mary K. and Mabel Miller, Beth, Rita and Laura Trace, Messrs. L. Lancaster, Harold Whitehead, D. Tyson, F. Mellor, Bob Whittan and Earl Pollock.

Hostess at Tea

Miss Barbara Player was hostess at a tea party yesterday afternoon at her home on Richmond Road in honor of Miss Vivienne Wood, R.N., whose marriage will take place on November 26. The tea table was prettily arranged with white chrysanthemums in a crystal basket, with white candles on either side. A lovely collection of gifts concealed in a model of a Jubilee Hospital bed was presented to the guest of honor. Those present were: Mrs. Lloyd Bassett, Mrs. G. G. H. Daniel, Misses Phinney, Rennie, West, Morrison, Bowden, Welton, Penton, Boughton, McDougall, Collingwood, Wilson, Hickman, Brindle, McCrae, Keeler, Ryall, Anderson and Latonnell.

Surprise Party Held

An enjoyable surprise party was given on Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Caesar Finnimore, 1312 Pandora Avenue, in honor of Mrs. Finnimore. Games, cards and contests were enjoyed during the evening. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. John Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Ted Oldall, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie McGregor, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Dick Ireland, Misses Bertha Hodges, Sadie Timmins, Pearl Timmins, Pat Kirchin, Mary Noels, Edith Lake, Dorothy Blair, Minnie Thomas, Mrs. Lauretta Anderson and Messrs. L. Fieldhouse, Gordon Woods, Douglas Creech and Bill Noels.

Christening Ceremony

The four-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. E. F. McNeill, 408 Parry Street, will be christened this afternoon at St. Barnabas' Church by Rev. N. E. Smith. The godparents will be Mrs. P. F. Turner, Mr. and Mrs. A. Rylands (Vancouver), and Mr. Stephen Bressingham. After the service, relatives and friends will be the supper guests of Mrs. P. F. Turner, 1437 Grant Street, where the christening cake, decorated in white and ornamented with the baby's name, will occupy the place of honor on the table.

Dance at Empress Hotel

There were nearly 300 dancers at the special Halloween cabaret at the Empress Hotel last evening. The Crystal Ballroom looked festive with lighted Jack-o'-Lanterns, black cats and witches and a profusion of Autumn flowers. The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. William F. Tickle, played as its featured numbers hits from Bing Crosby's motion picture, "Double or Nothing," the popular tunes being "It's the Natural Thing to Do" and "Smarty."

Entertains at Party

Mrs. George Gaetz entertained recently at her home on Forrester Avenue in honor of her daughter, Thelma. The decorations were carried out in Halloween colors. The evening was spent in games, music and dancing. The invited guests were Misses Joyce Bishop, Mary Bridges, Grace Ferguson, Olive Fox, Elaine Harte, Kathleen Hutton, Jeanette Macmillan, Marjorie Parsons and Kathleen Steward.

Sailing for Hongkong

Mrs. P. M. Langford, who has been staying at the Empress Hotel since her arrival from England, sailed yesterday aboard the Ss. Empress of Japan for Hongkong, where she will visit her son and daughter-in-law, Lieut. D. H. P. Gardiner, R.N., and Mrs. Gardiner. Mrs. Langford expects to return to Victoria in the Spring.

Received Handsome Gift

Upon leaving the taxation department of the Parliament Buildings, Mrs. Jack Cook (nee Jenkin) was the recipient of a case of Rogers flat silver in the "Sylvia" pattern. Mr. C. B. Peterson, commissioner of income tax, made the presentation on behalf of members of the department, and extended their best wishes to her for future happiness.

Sailing for West Indies

Miss Margaret McArthur, St. Patrick Street, will sail tomorrow from Seattle, aboard the Ss. Eria for the West Indies, where she will spend the Winter with relatives in Trinidad and Barbados.

CROCHET VEST-ETTES ARE NEW

by Mayfair

MAYFAIR NEEDLE-ART—DESIGN NO. 312

Crochet vest-ettes are new and they are new. Be the first in your set to wear one and you will be the envy of your friends. Nothing could be more attractive . . . and every woman knows the flattering qualities of lace and color contrast. This vest-ette is made of a simple yet most delightful crochet design which combines a petal motif with net work. Wear a bright clip at the neckline, fasten your belt neatly atop it; wear it over dark dress, with a knit costume or tucked smartly beneath the coat of your new Fall suit. It may be crocheted of crochet cottons, mercerized threads or wool. You will think of innumerable lovely combinations. The pattern includes easy-to-understand crochet instructions without abbreviations.

NORRIS-SMITH

Rev. A. deB. Owen officiated at the marriage of Gladys Eleanor, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Smith, 405 Vancouver Street, and Mr. William George Norris, only son of the late Mr. W. F. Norris, Nanaimo, and of Mrs. Norris, Victoria, which took place at 8:30 o'clock last evening at the home of the bride's parents.

The bride's brother, Mr. Stuart Smith, played the wedding marches and accompanied Miss Betty-Rae Ritchie, who sang "Until" as the register was being signed.

During the ceremony, the bride and groom stood beneath a floral arch. Mr. Smith gave his daughter away, and she wore a frock of French blue silk net over tulle with a lace jacket and blue hat, and carried a shower bouquet of Briar-cliff roses, pink carnations and blue forget-me-nots. Miss Catherine Marshall, Vancouver, the bridesmaid, was in a redingote frock of ivory silk net over tulle, worn with a gold turban and gold accessories. She carried a bouquet of single bronze chrysanthemums and "Better Times" roses. Mr. Albert Smith, brother of the bride, was best man.

Only relatives and a few close friends were present at the wedding and reception which followed. Mrs. Smith was dressed in bottle-green silk crepe, and receiving with her was the bridegroom's sister, Mrs. Frank Bickford, in blue, and they both wore corsage bouquets of pink carnations. A lace cloth covered the supper table, which was centred with the wedding cake standing between vases of pink carnations and tall pink tapers in silver holders.

After a honeymoon in Seattle and Spokane, for which the bride left in a maroon outfit with grey accessories, and a corsage bouquet of carnations, Mrs. Norris will make their home at 3329 Quadra Street.

POIRIER-BALL

A wedding of much interest was solemnized very quietly yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock at St. Matthias' Church, when Rev. Alan Gardiner united in marriage Vera Phyllis, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Ball, Rocky Point, Victoria, and Mr. Richard John Poirier, son of Mrs. A. McCoy, of this city. The bride looked smart in a French blue crepe dress with cowl neckline and short puff sleeves trimmed with gold sequins, with which she wore a small black felt hat with rose veil and other black accessories and a corsage bouquet of pink roses and maidenhair fern. She was attended by Mrs. Vincent Cave, who wore a black crepe dress cut on princess lines with which she wore wine accessories and a corsage bouquet of pink carnations. The groom was supported by Mr. Vincent Cave.

Mr. and Mrs. Poirier left on the afternoon boat for Seattle. The bride donned a grey lapin coat over her wedding outfit. Upon their return from their honeymoon, they will make their home in Victoria.

MORE ABOUT THE DROPPED
STOMACH—PTOSIS

I believe it would be a good investment of time and money for those suffering with chronic indigestion to take a barium meal and have it watched by X-ray during the few days required for it to pass completely out of the body. While not everyone can afford this examination, there are clinics where, if cancer is suspected, this examination will be given without charge.

This barium meal X-ray examination will not tell everything about the stomach and intestines, nevertheless it will tell whether cancer or ulcer is or is not present which is worth much to patient and physician. However, there is a condition which is frequently found by this method that may be causing various stomach and intestinal symptoms which other methods of examination have not discovered. This is a falling down—ptosis—of the stomach and intestines.

A patient with ptosis is usually thin and narrow in physique and is very nervous and irritable. Someone has described him as the automobile driver who finds that everybody is driving improperly except himself. This nervous, irritable condition, of course, removes most of the fat that should be supporting the abdominal organs, and so stomach and intestine fall to the bottom of the abdomen instead of being up in their proper positions. Naturally there will be stomach distress from slow emptying of the stomach, gas formation, constipation with occasional diarrhoea, and other symptoms of indigestion.

The treatment, as suggested a few weeks ago in talking about ptosis, is the building up of more fat in and on the body, the tightening or shortening of the abdominal muscles by exercise (thus preventing the abdomen to sag), and the wearing of a properly fitted belt which will hold up the stomach and intestine until at least some fat is stored between the organs, and the abdominal muscles have been tightened.

Rest of mind and body, whenever and wherever possible, will build up nervous energy instead of allowing it to be spent needlessly or without purpose.

TIP—TO GIVE

Don't ask us to prove it, but, talk ing about tipping—we have heard that: In Austria, trolley conductors used to be (and perhaps still are) tipped. In France, the tip is mandatory for the theatre usher and taxi driver; neither will let up on you, following you, and, if necessary, raising a disturbance, all the way to your seat or hotel room till you have "settled!" In a certain theatre in the U.S.A. the giving and acceptance of tips is discouraged by having the pockets of the ushers and doorman sewed up! "Tip" is said to be composed of the first letters of the three words in the phrase "To Insure Promptness," which used to be printed on boxes in English inns; in this receptacle the customer would deposit his contribution for the waiter. (Interesting, but not true, in our opinion.) "Tip" is probably from old English Rogues' Cant of obscure origin, the verb meaning "to give."

Social Activities and Notes of Personal Interest

Beaux-Arts Tea Dance Is Gay Affair

The Beaux-Arts commenced its social season yesterday afternoon with a delightfully informal tea dance in the Palm Room of the Crystal Garden.

Tea was served at attractively arranged tables centred with orange tapers and Jack-o'-lanterns. The orchestra platform was carried out in the Halloween motif, the entire front being covered with orange paper on which were placed miniature pumpkins. Autumn leaves and pom-pom dahlias completed the arrangement. Miss Florence Ruggles was in charge of the decorations.

Miss Gloria Wilson and Miss Evelyn Lytton were in charge of the arrangements and the entertaining programme was the work of Miss Wilson.

SPLENDID PROGRAMME

The sextette composed of Mrs. Jack Barracough, the Misses Margery and Honor Benson and Messrs. Fraser Lister, Dudley Wickett and Harry Davis, received enthusiastic applause. They opened the programme with the singing of "My Hero," from "The Chocolate Soldier," with Mrs. Barracough taking the solo. As an encore they gave "Take Your Pretty Partner to the Ball," from "The Country Girl," and climaxed it with "The Country Dance." Their other numbers included "Viennese Dreams," the sextette from "Floradora" and the "Italian Street Song," from "Floradora," in which Miss Margery Benson sang the solo.

The dance of the Halloween cats, presented by little Joan Sidwell and June Day, pupils of the Russian Ballet School, as two black cats, was most popular, as also was the Ghost Waltz, danced by Myra Batchelor, Myra Edwards, Georgina Dowdall, Geraldine Paterson and Maude Renwick, of the Russian Ballet School.

FILLED WITH DANCERS

Dancing was enjoyed from 4 to 7 o'clock and the Palm Room was filled with dancers, the music being supplied by a well-known orchestra.

Several members and friends played bridge early in the afternoon and later joined the dancers at the tea hour.

The affair was most enjoyable and afforded an opportunity for new members to become acquainted with other members and friends of the society, of which Mr. Brian Burdon-Murphy is president.

Widow: "Really? Oh, well, I know you're glad now that you have something to remember him by."

Bunny Ball At Nanaimo Successful

NANAIMO, Oct. 30.—Seven hundred children and adults, the largest juvenile dance crowd on record here, attended the annual bunny ball of Post No. 2, Native Daughters, in the Pygmy Pavillion last night. Mammoth bunnies were placed at different points in the space allotted for the youthful dances, and May Queen Joyce Morley viewed the proceedings from a booth on a large white swan.

Native Daughters wore character costumes. A miscellaneous programme of parlor and stage dancing interspersed the regular dance programme.

The profits will go towards the posts nursery ward in Nanaimo Hospital. The judges were Miss B. Wilson, Victoria Post, and Miss A. V. Cook, Victoria.

Costume prize winners were Janet Menely and Jack Dudley; Dauria Mitchell and Lorraine Vanger; B. MacDonald and Lucy Street; Bobby John and Muriel Ganner; Dorothy Bennett and Baer Fulton. Miss J. Bertram was general convener.

Masquerade Dance Draws Large Crowd

The first masquerade dance to be held in the new Community Hall, Sooke, was carried out satisfactorily on Friday evening when members of the Sooke and North Sooke Women's Institute were hostesses for the evening.

A large number of the 250 guests were attired in fancy dress. A group of eight ghosts, a savage Zulu, who, partnered with a Hula girl who was later found to be Mr. E. Eve, caused a great deal of laughter, as did also a Chinese couple. There were dairymaids, Halloween couples, departed spirits, Sooke roses, ballerinas, Spanish girls, old-fashioned ladies, a true Highland lassie, advertisements, Santa Claus, gypsies and many others who danced to the strains of a five-piece orchestra.

Many of the costumes were home made and presented the judges, Dr. E. Maude Robertson, Mr. C. A. Helgesen and J. Law Beattie, with a difficult task of selecting the winners.

PRIZE WINNERS

Prizes were awarded as follows: Best-dressed lady, Mrs. Ralph Strong, Welsh lady; best-dressed gentleman, Mr. Victor Syrett, Hindu; best comic lady, Mrs. James Forrest, Alice the Goon; best comic gentleman, Mr. Frank G. Gray, patched sock; best Halloween lady, Mrs. William Baker, witch; best couple, Mr. and Mrs. J. Martin, the Bedouin Arabs; best original lady, Miss Jeanne L. Thorneby, Vivandiere; best original gentleman, Mr. Russell Pontious, Zulu chief; best home-made costume, Miss Dorree Trevett, pirate.

Special prizes were awarded to Mrs. A. J. Syrett, who represented the Sooke community spirit, and to Charles Syrett, who was dressed as a Roman soldier.

Refreshments were served and dancing continued until 2 a.m.

LOCAL RINGERS TO CELEBRATE

Three-Hundredth Anniversary of Brotherhood to Be Marked Here

Coinciding with the celebration on November 6 from St. Paul's Cathedral, London, of the 300th birthday of the Ancient Society of College Youths, a famous bell-ringing brotherhood which has members all over the world, the Christ Church Cathedral ringers, Victoria, will that evening, at 8 o'clock, ring what is called "changes of eight bells."

The St. Paul's peal will have in it 5,002 changes.

NUMBERS HUNDREDS

The Ancient Society of College Youths, which in England for three centuries has rung the bells of Britain in peals of Coronation rejoicings, weddings, and numerous other occasions, today numbers hundreds. Many of the "Youths" are seventy, eighty, even ninety years old, who grew old and venerable in service. Bell-ringing seems to make for longevity. Anyone who has been sufficiently interested to mount the Cathedral tower steps in Victoria to the bell-ringers' loft will realize, after watching the ringers at work, that only men of strength and endurance could "carry on." It can be very arduous work, but in the Old Land veterans who have spent half a century or more at the bell-rope will assure one that they themselves are "sound as bells."

One of the disasters that sometimes befalls a bell-ringer is the breaking of the braces from the strain of pulling. The consequences might prove embarrassing, but it would be still more embarrassing if the ringer stopped pulling his rope, for not only would it "jangle the melody," but it might prove dangerous for the heavy rope to go flying at random in the air.

FEW WOMEN RING

It is largely because of the arduousness of the work of ringing that so few women ring. But in England there are women ringers, and they have formed a guild of their own, 500 strong, and claim that the exercise is an aid to beauty, excellent for "slimming."

Six men of Marnhull in Dorset, England, have completed more than forty years ringing as a team. A ringer of Bradford Cathedral, Joe Broadley, has rung in more than 300 church towers in different parts of the Old Land.

Back in the mountains, along the Alaskan border, where a grizzly successfully claimed a wild goat shot for meat in a mining camp—and big timber wolves boldly wreck the "meat safe"—Pacific Milk is preferred to such an extent that a case of another brand was packed in and returned—nearly thirty miles each way.

Delegates were welcomed at the morning session by Mr. Youhill, president of Victoria and District Trades and Labor Council. He stated the main purpose of the convention was to frame an act to be presented to the Provincial Legislature. It would protect the worker from unethical methods, particularly the threat of dismissal of any who attempted to join a labor organization for their own protection.

NO LEGAL REASON

The law permitted an employer or business to form organizations for their mutual protection and benefit, and there was no legal reason why such rights should not be enjoyed by those who did the world's work, he stated.

Mr. Youhill hoped the representative body of trades unionists would find time in which to perfect arrangements whereby a Provincial labor body could be formed, an organization that British Columbia had needed for many years. In conclusion, he thanked the committee responsible for bringing delegates together.

Since there was considerable unemployment, the convention agreed that the Provincial Government should immediately proceed with negotiations to construct a highway through British Columbia to Alaska to provide necessary work.

WATERFRONT TROUBLE

A resolution pointed out seventy members of the I.L.A. were denied the right to work on docks through alleged discrimination of the British Columbia Shipping Federation. It was agreed that the Federal Minister of Labor should be asked to investigate the situation without delay.

Bakery representatives pointed out the original weight of a loaf decreased twelve hours after it was baked. For reasons of health and protection of the public, they suggested the Provincial Legislature decree that bakers should work only in the daytime. The resolution carried.

After discussion on formation of a British Columbia federation of labor, it was decided to appoint a committee this afternoon to communicate with trades unions of the province and seek their opinion.

The tenth and final resolution demanding from Premier T. D. Pattullo and Hon. George S. Pearson, Minister of Labor, an immediate increase in relief allowances was amended by the word "request" in a resolutions committee report.

TOM UPHILL HEARD

Tyng Uphill, M.P.P. for Fernie, informed the convention "demand" was the only word the Provincial Government understood. He alleged only those loyal to the Government could secure work around Fernie, and it was up to the trades unions to do something for the unemployed. At his suggestion, it was decided to make the resolution read "demand" instead of "request."

In discussing "An Act to Amend and Consolidate 'An Act Relating to Trade Unions,'" Harold E. Winch, M.P.P., hoped organized labor would meet to express its voice at every session of the Legislature.

He referred to section four of the act dealing with permission to carry out peaceful picketing; section five, forcing employers to discuss wages, hours or conditions of labor with employees' representatives; and section seven, requiring unions to turn in to the Minister of Labor full reports on strikes or lockouts.

Mr. Winch pointed out a trades union bill should be non-partisan, of great benefit to trades unions in the province, and should definitely permit peaceful picketing.

He stated the draft of a proposed Trades and Labor Council bill re the right to organize, had nothing to say that employers must recognize trades unions and deal with them. In conclusion, Mr. Winch asserted any such bill would have the unanimous support of C.C.F. members on the floor of the Legislature.

Speakers at a luncheon meeting were: Percy Bengough, Vancouver; Mr. Jamieson, Mr. Midgley, and Samuel Guthrie, M.P.P. for Cowichan-Newcastle. Mr. Youhill, toastmaster, humorously recalled that he first met Mr. Guthrie in 1913, during labor troubles, at Nanaimo. Mr. Youhill was in the army at that time.

FIGURES CLOSE FOR BUILDINGS

Only Few Dollars Difference Between Oak Bay and Saanich in October

The two municipalities of Oak Bay and Saanich have been running close races during the year for premier place in the value of building permits taken out each month. For the month just closing, Oak Bay won out with only a few dollars ahead for the whole month.

Oak Bay permits totaled $20,970 for the month of October, while Saanich buildings reached the figure of $20,632 for the same period.

Both municipalities fell a little below the figures of October, 1936, in the values of permits issued. In October, 1936, Oak Bay had a value of $22,405, while Saanich in the same time was improved to the extent of $21,580.

TEN-MONTH PERIOD

In the figures covering the whole ten months of the year ending with October 31, Saanich has the advantage over Oak Bay by a fair margin. In Saanich the total building permits for the ten months of the present year represent a value of $366,568. This was slightly below the total for the corresponding ten months of 1936, when the total reached $369,856.

Oak Bay's figures over the same ten months show this year's building values of $322,006, as compared with $225,130 in the same period of 1936. When the new houses only are considered, Oak Bay still shows a decided increase. In the ten months of 1937, there were eighty permits for houses alone, representing a value of $305,135, as compared with sixty-nine houses in 1936 valued at $225,130.

ESQUIMALT FIGURES

In Esquimalt the building permits passing through the Municipal Hall numbered four in the month of October just ending, representing a value of $4,250, as compared with three permits in the same period of 1936 showing a value of $3,150. The total in Esquimalt for the ten months of 1937 was $37,090, as compared with $46,840 in the corresponding period of 1936.

In the case of Esquimalt, however, there is a much larger expenditure shown by the various departments at Ottawa over the period as compared with 1936. These are not put through the Municipal Hall and so find no place in the building figures offered.

I.O.D.E. Activities

THE DIONNE QUINS GIVE YOU THEIR "BEAUTY SECRET"

WE MUST USE THE MOST SOOTHING SOAP

"When we were tiny babies, Dr. Dafoe bathed us only with Olive Oil. Later, when we were ready for soap and water, he chose the soap made from the most soothing ingredients."

SO DON'T YOU THINK PALMOLIVE IS BEST FOR YOUR COMPLEXION, TOO?

"Doesn't it just stand to reason, that if Palmolive is safest for our tender skin, it must be best for yours, too? Well, anyway, our advice is, only Palmolive, the soap made with Olive Oil."

DR. DAFOE CHOSE PALMOLIVE

"Dr. Dafoe chose Palmolive, made with gentle Olive Oil, because he was glad he did, for we've never had any complexion trouble. In fact, everyone says we have unusually soft, smooth skin."

PALMOLIVE WILL KEEP YOUR COMPLEXION YOUNG!

Does your skin seem dry, lifeless, slightly coarse-looking? Even girls in their twenties have this condition. It is called "Middle-Age" Skin. Beauty experts say, "Use Palmolive Soap regularly. For Palmolive is made from a blend of real beauty ingredients, soothing Olive and Palm oils. That's why Palmolive's gentle, lather keeps your complexion soft, smooth, young!"

WHY DR. DAFOE CHOSE PALMOLIVE

Because the Quins were born prematurely their skin has always required very special care. Dr. Dafoe's own statement:

"For some time after their birth, the Dionne Quintuplets were bathed with Olive Oil. When the time arrived for soap and water baths, we chose Palmolive Soap exclusively for bathing these famous babies."

CHAPTER XIV

She felt quite light-hearted as she crossed the hallway and opened the door of Robert's room. She felt a little shy—much more shy this morning, when Robert was there.

A nice room, she thought—a little stiff and formal, perhaps, but she could soon alter that, or perhaps Robert would consent to taking another flat which they could furnish to their own choice . . . then her thoughts seemed to stand still.

Absurd to make any plans. She had no idea how long or how short a time this fantastic relationship would last. Oh, well! . . . She shrugged her shoulders and looked longingly at the bed.

It was only just after four now—in another moment she was curled up against the pillows, soft and inviting . . . she felt so wonderfully secure . . . it was as if Robert Harwood had lifted a load of care from her shoulders and had transferred it to his own.

In a few minutes she was asleep—so dreamlessly that she did not hear a latch-key in the outer door and a man's cheery whistling.

Robert threw his hat down on the table nearly knocking over the flowers before he saw them, then he stood staring at them with thoughtful eyes.

Flowers! . . . he wished it had occurred to him to buy some for her—girls always liked flowers. And then he saw the new evening frock and a small pair of blue shoes standing neatly together on the floor.

He smiled and tiptoed across to them with a faint air of embarrassment about his big person. It looked such a little frock. He half moved a hand as if to touch it, then he drew back.

He turned his head, calling her name softly, "Syrie . . ." No answer. Gone out again perhaps to spend some more money; the thought gave him pleasure; how the feminine mind revelled in shops.

Well, it would be an opportunity to get the clothes he would want to wear tonight and to clear out before she returned. He started whistling light-heartedly again as he crossed the narrow hall to the bedroom. Life was not so bad after all; and then suddenly his step was arrested. He gave a quick gasp as he saw Syrie lying asleep on the bed.

And she looked so little, too. Like a trusting child who sleeps happily, confident that it is secure . . . one hand cuddled beneath her cheek, the other hanging limply over the side of the bed, palm upwards.

He looked at her with an unusual feeling of tenderness, his thoughts taking expressions in an essentially masculine way: "It's a damned shame."

He hardly knew what he meant; perhaps that it was a damned shame she should have found life so difficult; perhaps it was a damned shame that her own father should have so little regard for her that it was possible for her to be lying there in a strange man's room. And for the first time he realized the danger to which he had exposed her, and he thought grimly, "If I'd been a different sort of chap . . ."

But he was not a different sort of chap, and so it made all the difference.

The bright afternoon sunshine was streaming in at the window and right into Syrie's face. With infinite care he crossed the room and drew the curtain. In the sudden subdued light he stumbled against a chair, but Syrie slept on peacefully, and Robert made his way back to the sitting-room.

"When?" he drew a deep breath of relief. It might have been damned awkward if she wakened to find him there.

He couldn't get his clothes after all, so he picked up his hat and left the flat, pulling the door to behind him very quietly. "I'll buy her some flowers to wear," he thought. Perhaps the girl in the shop would help him.

"Do you know what color the lady will be wearing, sir?" The girl was sympathetic and anxious to assist the rather embarrassed young man.

"White," Robert answered promptly, remembering the little frock lying across the sofa back. "And blue shoes," he added.

"She went back to her rags," Syrie said.

They took a taxi to a well-known hotel restaurant. "I've never been here in my life," Syrie whispered as they entered the big lounge.

"Like dancing?" he asked.

"Love it—do you?"

"Sometimes." He left her at the cloakroom door. "I'll meet you here."

"It's a dream," Syrie told herself as she gave her cloak to the attendant and walked over to one of the big mirrors. She felt that a stranger looked back at her as she powdered her nose—a flushed and rather beautiful stranger in a white frock with dancing eyes and smiling lips.

"It's a dream," she told herself again. "In a minute I shall wake up in that awful back room at Mrs. Green's."

"I've got a table," Robert said when she joined him. His eyes wandered over her slim daintiness approvingly as together they went down to the big restaurant. He had always admired her in a vague man-like way, but tonight he seemed to see her differently—possessively—remembering how that afternoon he had seen her lying asleep with her face pressed into his pillows.

What Today Means

"SCORPIO"

If October 31 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:15 a.m. to 12:15 p.m., from 2:15 to 4:15 p.m., and from 8:15 to 10:15 p.m. The danger periods are from 8:15 to 10:15 a.m., from 6:15 to 8:15 p.m., and from 10:15 p.m. until midnight.

It will be advisable to be benevolently tolerant in your attitude towards those observing the traditions of All Hallow E'en. Your temper may be sorely tried this day, but under all circumstances control it. It might be advisable to plan some form of diversion, because otherwise time is liable to seem slow in passing and a feeling of irritability might spoil your evening. Prevailing influences may make the average person's nerves jumpy, and extremely susceptible to any kind of excitement, noises or startling sounds. Through a distorted sense of humor, practical jokes are likely to have unfortunate results, so it will be good judgment not to indulge in them. Fire, in all likelihood, will constitute one of the day's practical hazards. This calls for an unusual amount of caution on everybody's part. Married and engaged couples, as well as those practicing the gentle art of wooing, must be very considerate of each other's feelings this day, if misunderstandings are to be avoided.

If a woman and October 31 is your birthday, be careful some idealistic idea does not make you do something impracticable. Too many air castles can cause you to become oblivious to some of the important exigencies in the workaday world that require your attention. Love, probably, will play a very important part in your life, so welcome it with open arms. Through it you may find the ideal husband. As a buyer, store manager, teacher, agent, actress, writer or musician, you may score a great hit.

The child born on October 31 is generally inclined to be headstrong. When quite young it must learn to consider the wishes of other people and to be unselfish.

If a man and October 31 is your natal day, you should have no trouble in making friends and being popular. Engineering, the stage, pulpit, lecture platform, journalism or some commercial line of activity may be your means of becoming financially independent.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 1 "SCORPIO"

If November 1 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:30 to 10:30 a.m., from 12:30 to 2:30 p.m., and from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a.m., from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m., and from 8:30 to 10:30 p.m. Today, with the exception of affairs of a sentimental nature, will probably be uneventful and peaceful. This ought to be an auspicious day for all forms of social activities, particularly for visiting friends and relatives. The subject of any conversation should be selected with care, for depressing topics are liable to be the cause of much mental distress today. Influences are apt to make the mental faculties unusually alert, so it may be an exceptionally good day for writers, or anyone who decides to make use of the pen. Jealousy and suspicion, unfortunately, are likely to be easily aroused today, so anyone who might suffer from either must be very discreet in both their words and actions. Married and engaged couples, as well as sweethearts, will find that teasing is an irritant, conducive to making its victim decidedly disagreeable today, so it will be good judgment to refrain from indulging in it.

If a woman and November 1 is your birthday, you are probably very intellectual, very daring, witty, and ambitious. Your undertakings are likely to be very successful, especially those of a commercial or artistic nature. The chances are you have very few intimate friends but a very large number of acquaintances, many of whom would like to know you better. You are apt to get along much better with men than with members of your own sex. Through work of an educational, artistic, literary or executive nature, your achievements might make you nationally known. As a married woman you ought to find far more happiness than if you remained single.

The child born on November 1 is generally either an avid reader or has a decidedly mechanical turn of mind. This youngster is usually blessed with an exceptionally good disposition.

If a man and November 1 is your natal day, you may have to overcome many obstacles before you discover the means of making a great deal of money. Courage and optimism are the two things you need to be successful. Politics, contracting, manufacturing, engineering, writing, acting, or work of an agricultural nature, may provide the means through which all of your financial problems will be solved.

DOMINOES WIN THIRD STRAIGHT GAME OF SEASON

Greenshirts Beat Esquimalt; Work Point XI in Draw

Victoria West Still Undeclared in Senior Soccer By Coming Through Against Dockers, 5-1—Score Does Not Indicate Play—Garrison Holds Saanich Thistles to Two-All Score

HOW THEY STAND

	W.	L.	D.	P.	A.	Pts.
Victoria West	3	0	0	12	2	6
S. Thistles	1	0	2	7	5	4
Victoria City	1	1	1	7	3	3
Garrison	1	2	1	12	16	3
Esquimalt	0	3	0	4	16	0

Victoria West 5, Esquimalt 1.
Saanich Thistles 2, Garrison 2.

Outscoring their opponents by four clear goals, Victoria West continued their unbeaten trail in the First Division of the Victoria and District Football League, yesterday afternoon at Heywood Avenue ground, by turning back a bustling young Esquimalt eleven, 5-1. In the match at the Athletic Park, Saanich Thistles were held to a two-all deadlock by the Garrison from Work Point Barracks. The draw moved the Thistles into undisputed second place, two points below the pace-setting greenshirts and put the soldiers into a tie with Victoria City for the third berth.

Although Victoria West trimmed Esquimalt by four tallies, there wasn't that much difference between the clubs on the day's play. Esquimalt fought desperately in the final half and peppered the West goal with countless shots and aggressive attacks, but Tommy Restall turned them aside after a very busy session between the upstarts. In the opening half, the Wests dominated the early play and missed at least six good chances to score, and then Esquimalt turned right around and ran the greenshirts off their feet through aggressiveness and nothing more.

WESTS IN FRONT
Noel Morgan, clever inside left, opened the scoring for the Wests when he fired a terrific drive to the corner, which Goalie Chalmers had little chance to save. About half a minute from the interval, Morgan netted again with a soft shot, which the goalie couldn't see as his teammates blocked his sight of the ball. Shortly after the final forty-five minutes started, John Watt went through on Morgan's opening and scored from close range and then later in the match, Gordie Bell converted from the penalty spot after Ab Marsh had handled. Esquimalt had previously broken into the score column when Holmes banged in a first-timer from a few feet out after many dangerous attacks. The Dockers continued to press hard and did everything around the West net but score. Once Holmes hit the crossbar with the goalie well beaten. The Wests registered their last goal on a breakaway following two Esquimalt corner kicks. Watt raced through the opposition defence and picked the far corner out of Goalie Chalmers' reach not long before the finish.

Robb refereed, and teams follow:
Victoria West—Restall, Sweeney, J. Okell, Lorrain, C. Restall, Sage, Bell, R. Okell, Watt, Morgan and G. Barnes.
Esquimalt—Chalmers, Stewart, Marsh, Sage, Cooper, Young, Smith, J. Stewart, Barnswell, Tregellis, Holmes and Watt.

PLAY TO DRAW
In a game characterized by lack of combination on both sides, Saanich Thistles drew with Garrison, two all, at Royal Athletic Park. There were occasional flashes of good soccer, but the general impression of the game was one of rather ragged play, with little attention to direction and placing in the kicking and an inclination on the part of some of the players to try a lone-handed game.

Both sides were inclined to kick the ball around uselessly, without waiting to find their men, and Garrison especially were apt to carry the ball too long, losing several chances thereby. Garrison were unable to field their regular eleven, and filled in with six reserves. They were rarely dangerous in the goal area. Cook helped materially to keep up a good defence, and had it not been for him, Thistles probably would have gone through much more often than they did. There was some good material in the lighter Thistles eleven, and young Speller was frequently prominent, as were also Hope and Cosier.

There was a somewhat ragged start to the game, but the standard of play improved as the players settled down and showed less inclination to lose control of the ball through over-eagerness. Garrison began to press early, but Thistles broke away from their own goal area and swept down the field for McCaig to lead drive a long first timer that found the net eight minutes after the game opened.

Garrison took up the attack again and had several good chances in front of the goal, but lost them all through delaying their shooting. Thistles then took the game to the other end, and a scramble ensued in front of the Garrison goal, in which Elliott came out in an attempt to clear. The ball rolled towards a wide open goal and it looked as if Thistles were going to get a score, but Cook nipped in to effect a smart save.

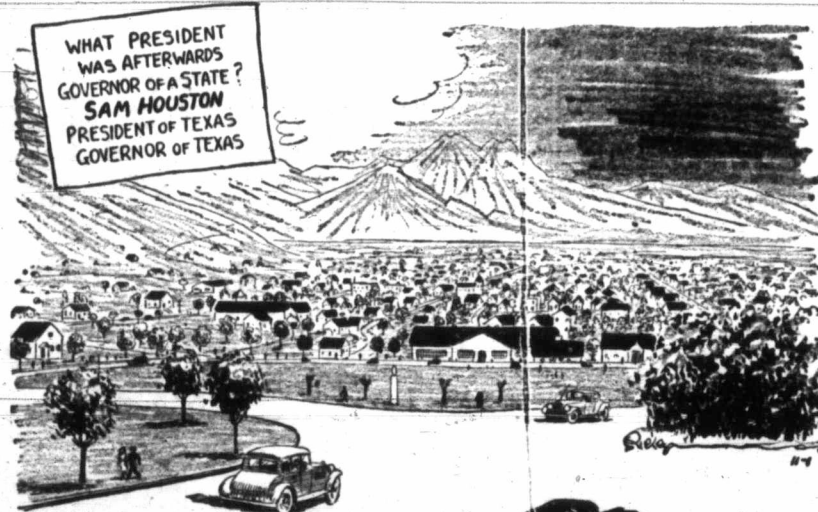

Soon afterwards Crowe sent the ball down the right wing to Hope, who let drive a long kick that easily beat the defender, giving Thistles a lead of two-nil. Garrison then kept their opponents penned in for some time, but lost several chances through their failure to shoot, until Kennedy sent a nice cross to Wright, who checked it and passed back to Worwick, the latter scoring Garrison's first goal with a hard drive.

Garrison got down to work early in the second half, but Thistles broke through occasionally to try the Garrison defence. Thistles showed a nice piece of team work half way through the spell, and were unfortunate not to bring it to a successful conclusion. Garrison, however, had slightly the better of play, and kept up a succession of attacks until Worwick centred to Wright, who found the corner of the net and equalized the score. There were some brisk exchanges in the last few minutes, but no further scores were added.

J. C. Dows refereed, and teams follow:
Thistles—Wensley, Carmichael, Leggett, Williams, Wallace, A. Speller, Hope, McCaig, Crowe, Cosier, M. Speller. Armitage substituted for Williams in the second half.
Garrison—Elliott, Cook, Evans, Thomson, Jim Watt, Kennedy, Thorburn, Worwick, Wright, Bishard, Hamilton. Clarke substituted for Bishard in the second half.

Hallowe'en—The Pantheon in Rome is the noblest and best preserved of all ancient Roman buildings. It was built as a heathen temple in the time of Emperor Hadrian, between 117 and 138 A.D., who dedicated it to all gods. In 612, Pope Boniface IV converted the Pantheon into a Christian place of worship consecrated to all saints. The eve of this consecration was the first Hallowe'en of the Christian era.

WAR ADMIRAL HEADS FIELD IN HANDICAP

Sam Riddle's Great Sprinter Wins Big Purse—Seabiscuit Scratched

LAUREL, Md., Oct. 30 (AP).—War Admiral, Samuel D. Riddle's little brown colt, scamped to his seventh straight triumph today to win the mile and one-quarter Washington Handicap and become the big money winner of the year.

His victory by a length and a half over Heffly in the last time of 2:04.45 was worth $15,350 to the Admiral, bringing his earnings for the year to $180,820 and shoving him ahead of C. S. Howard's Seabiscuit in money-earning ranks.

The prospect of a duel between War Admiral and Seabiscuit, handicapped champion of the season, vanished when Seabiscuit was scratched early today.

Easily the best of the three-year-olds, War Admiral was asked to battle some of the "grown-up" stars for the first time—but it was the same old story. Only T. P. Morgan's Heffly was able to stand the pace and make any sort of a challenge down the stretch. None of the older horses among his six rivals threatened.

One of Tomorrow's Swimming Classes

Tomorrow afternoon, at 4:30, these children will enter the pool at the Crystal Garden for their third period of instruction in The Daily Colonist "Learn to Swim" campaign. They are but one contingent of the six hundred youngsters, aged eight to twelve, who are entered in the six-week course in swimming, offered free by The Colonist and carried out under the supervision of R. Raymond, manager of the Crystal Garden.

Brentford Holds Premier Position By Goal Average

Tied in Points With Chelsea in English First Division, but Average Puts Them Slightly in Front—Wolverhampton Held to Draw by Grimsby Town—Middlesbrough in Victory

LONDON, Oct. 31 (AP).—Form-shattering results over the weekend gave ample evidence of the intensity of competition in senior English football. In the eleven First Division games played, only three home victories were recorded against five visiting clubs, while three matches were drawn.

Brentford assumed leadership over Chelsea by virtue of a superior goal average, although the clubs are tied with eighteen points each.

FAR TOO STRONG
Brentford proved far too good for Portsmouth and the losers have yet to win a game this season. The Bees tallied through Holliday and Scott in the first half, and although Portsmouth improved later, the margin was not reduced.

Middlesbrough won an unexpected victory over Arsenal at Highbury, but the Gunners were unfortunate in losing Roberts, their centre-half, in the second half through injury. Milne gave the Londoners a 1-0 lead at half-time, but Cochran and Brown netted for the visitors after the change of ends. It was the first time Arsenal had been defeated at home during the present campaign.

Another home record went by the boards at Sunderland, where the cup holders went under, 3-2, to Liverpool, one of the tailenders. Pagan and Nieuwenhuys sent the visitors into the lead, but Carter and Gallacher tied the count. Hanson netted the winning point after sixty-eight minutes had elapsed.

A goal by Baker gave Stoke City maximum points at Blackpool, but the Potters had a hard job to preserve their lead after the interval. Leeds United played practically the whole game against Leicester City with another player, but despite the handicap won, 4-2. Hodgson sent two of the winners' goals, Milburn and Huckleby getting the others, while Stubbs and Liddle tallied for the city.

Coventry City is still the unbeaten leader of the Second Division. Sixty-five thousand saw the doleful Midlands draw, 1-1, with Aston Villa Park, and the gates were closed long before the game started. McDonald put the visiting team ahead, but the Villans were guilty of a lot of poor shooting in the remainder of the opening forty-five minutes. Houghton equalized seven minutes after the interval, but there was no further scoring.

Notts County for the Third Division, Southern Section leadership by its triumph over Torquay United. In addition to Mangnall's three goals, Walsh got two and Steel and Brooley one each.

In the northern circuit Lincoln City and Gateshead share top place with nineteen points each. Lincoln made it 5-0 over Rotherham United, goal-scorers being Towler, two; Callender, Deacon and Whyte.

Bertrand Makes New Swim Mark

WINNIPEG, Oct. 30 (AP).—Wally Bertrand, eighteen-year-old swimmer under tutelage of Tommy Walker, Winnipeg Swimming Club coach, today held a new Dominion record for the 150-yard backstroke event. Swimming against time at a swim meet here Friday night, Bertrand was clocked by five officials of the Manitoba Branch of the Canadian Amateur Swimming Association in 1:46.3-5, shattering the old mark of 1:50 made by E. Cline, of Vancouver.

VICTORIA CAGERS IN 31-29 VERDICT OVER INVADING U.S. TEAM

Hank Rowe's Two Converted Free Throws in Last Minute of Play Decides Game in Favor of Dave Nicol's Quintette Over Seattle Cammarano's—Rambler's Win Thrilling Game

Two converted free throws by "Hank" Rowe in the last minute of play brought Victoria's Dominos through on top of a 31-29 score last night over the Seattle Cammarano's, in the roughest and closest basketball fixture played on the floor of the High School gym this season and probably half a dozen other seasons thrown in. Hon. Frank MacPherson, after being introduced by Alderman James Adam, tossed up the first ball.

The boys used everything but machine guns as they scrimmaged their way to the basket, or brought down an opponent with timely hacks and well-placed elbows. However, the crowd was on its feet throughout most of the second half as the score saw-sawed back and forth and bruised and sweating players rained shot after shot at the hoop.

Although the Seattle guards kept Rogin bottled up like a can of sardines in the first half, the big guard smashed his way through to pile up ten points, six of them via the foul line strip, in the second stanza.

The offensive spark plug of the visiting quintette was Bill Hilton, slight but speedy forward. As elusive as an eel he flashed through the Dominos' rear guard and banged in eighteen points, to poll the highest total for the evening. Hilton also let go with the heart-breaking shot of the game, a long one, with only a few seconds to go, that bounced up and down on the hoop three or four times, but just refused to drop through.

Seattle was out in front, 15-11, at the half-way mark.

EXCITING GAME
Equally as exciting, but far cleaner, was the preliminary tussle between the Ramblers and St. Louis College Alumni. The Ramblers took the decision, 29-27, after leading by three points at the half, 16-13.

With a lead of five points, it looked like a fairly easy victory for the Ramblers, but St. Louis fought back doggedly and came within two points. A split second after the final gong, Melton Hughes banged in a rebound that would have been the tying basket of the game. B. Martin, of the Alumni, topped the scorers with thirteen points. N. Parfitt, of the Ramblers, earned eleven. Bill Murphy, whose talking was faster than his playing, put Seattle in front shortly after the opening whistle with a free shot. Rogin equalized from the strip and Chuck Chapman put the locals ahead with another awarded toss. Graff countered for Cammarano to make it 2-2. From here on Seattle went out in front. Rogin could not click from the bucket, so closely was he checked by Fredericks.

Thirteen minutes had ticked by before the Dominos put through a basket. Stan Jackson, up and coming young rookie, made the tally after replacing Rogin in the bucket. Taylor tossed in a one-hander, making it 9-6, but two baskets by

COLLEGE AND NAVY WIN RUGBY GAMES

Craigdarroch Boys Defeat Wanderers, 6-3—Sailors Trounce Canadian Scottish

Victoria College Rugby fifteen moved out in front in the Intermediate League race yesterday when they eked out a 6-3 victory over the Oak Bay Wanderers at the Victoria High School ground.

The Craigdarroch boys took the lead when "Rick" Williams fell on the ball following a scrum near the Wanderers' line. Oak Bay knotted the score soon after when Jack Davey went over following an attack by the forwards. Half-time arrived with the score unchanged. Early in the final session Bill Noel kicked what proved to be the winning point when he booted the leather over the bar from a penalty kick.

Playing at Admirals Road, Navy trounced the Canadian Scottish rugger, 26-3.

J.B.A.A. RUGGERS TURN BACK OAK BAY, 12 TO 9

Brown's Goal Is Deciding Factor In Close Tussle

Drops Over Winning Points in Oarsmen's Great Decision Over Wanderers in Senior Rugby Match—Losers Have Decided Edge in First Half, but Trail, 8-3

SENIOR "A" LEAGUE

J.B.A.A.	W.	L.	D.	P.	A.	P.
Oak Bay Wanderers	1	0	0	29	9	4
Garrison	0	2	0	0	43	0

J.B.A.A. 12; Oak Bay Wanderers 9.

The educated toe of Buzz Brown, inside three-quarter of Coach Bert Buller's J.B.A.A. rugger, yesterday booted the Oarsmen to a sweet 12-9 triumph over the Oak Bay Wanderers in a keenly fought senior "A" Rugby match at Macdonald Park. Brown accounted for five of the dozen points garnered by the Bays when he converted Collier's try in the initial stanza, and then dropped a beautiful field goal in the last half.

It was easily the season's best oval ball exhibition at the James Bay enclosure and sent the fans home convinced that when the Bays and the Wanderers meet again there's going to be plenty of smart Rugby.

Oak Bay lads, staging a return to senior company after a long absence, made a commendable showing against the champions — Bays are present holders of the Barnard Cup — and with a little more finish in their attacks would probably have won the match. They made some excellent runs, more particularly in the initial stanza, when they dominated the play, and then, for no apparent reason, failed at the crucial stages. It could easily have been a case of over eagerness on the part of the Wanderers, but it looked to be more a case of inexperience.

Bays, certainly outclassed in the first half despite the fact that they led 8-3 at the breather, rallied smartly in the final thirty-five minutes of play and looked a much better aggregation. Oarsmen, usually noted for their backfield movements, kicked at every opportunity and made most of their gains with this type of offensive. Their forwards played more aggressive Rugby in the second half and kept much closer to the play.

With Campbell Forbes, of the Wanderers, and Bill Halkett, of the Bays, doing the kicking, free kicks in the early stages of the game left the fifteen deadlocked at 3-3. Wanderers, doing considerable attacking, swarmed down on their opponents time after time and did everything but score. They handled nicely far back, but as they neared the line their passes went astray.

COLLIER GOES OVER

J.B.A.A. drove deep into the Wanderers' territory just before the breather, for their first real offensive of the game, and, following a line-out, Collier dashed across for a try. Buzz Brown converted and the Bays went out in front, 8-3.

The second half was only minutes old when Buzz Brown, in close quarters, elected to try a drop kick and the pigskin drifted over the bar for a goal. It was the final score of the afternoon for the Bays.

Wanderers crept a little closer when Ronnie McConnan added three points on a free kick given for offside, and then wound up the scoring with Brent Murdoch going over after a fine backfield run. The kick failed.

Percy Sweetnam refereed, and the teams were:

J.B.A.A. — Ferguson, Shepherd, Smith, Bridge, Brown, Halkett, Stipe, Dalziel, Collier, C. Doherty, P. Doherty, Rutter, Croft, Bray and Peterson.

Oak Bay Wanderers — Grogan, Carney, Brown, Murdoch, McConnan, Barber, Anderson, Acland, Moore, Gornall, Turner, Forbes, McGregor and Thompson.

WALES BEATS SCOTLAND IN CLOSE MATCH

Wins International Football By Odd Goal in Three Before 45,000 Fans

CARDIFF, Wales, Oct. 31 (C)—England and Wales are out in front in the battle for international soccer honors this season. Following the Englishmen's brilliant 6-1 victory over Ireland eight days ago, Wales thrilled a crowd of 45,000 at Ninian Park Saturday by defeating Scotland, 2-1.

It was the Principality's second successive triumph over the Scots and its tenth since 1876, when the international series started. Scotland has been successful on thirty-six occasions, running up a total of 167 goals against Wales' sixty-six. Twelve contests have been drawn. Last year, Wales won 2-1 at Dens Park, Dundee.

After trying out several young players in inter-league tilts this year, Scotland reverted to its seasoned stars for Saturday's game, but their clever close-passing type of play availed little against the rugged, fierce-tackling tactics adopted by the Welshmen.

The home players were on top most of the ninety minutes, and although reduced to ten for half of the second period, Scotland could not break through for the tying counter. While the Welshmen drove straight for goal at every opportunity, the Scots persisted in their pattern-weaving style of game and then finished weakly. The Scottish backs were also frequently at fault.

Only one goal was scored before the interval, Bryn Jones, Wolverhampton Wanderers inside forward, being successful after twenty-seven minutes. St. Morris, Birmingham winger, got the second soon after the change of ends, taking advantage of a misunderstanding by the Scottish backs.

After C. Phillips, Aston Villa forward, had been forced to leave the field through injury, Alex Massie, veteran international back, reduced the margin from a free kick.

The teams: Wales: Goal, Gray (Chester); backs, Turner (Charlton Athletic), Hughes (Birmingham); halfbacks, Murphy (West Bromwich Albion), Hanford (Sheffield Wednesday); Richards (Birmingham); forwards, Phillips (Aston Villa), Leslie Jones (Coventry City), Perry (Doncaster Rovers), Bryn Jones (Wolverhampton Wanderers), Morris (Birmingham).

Scotland: Goal, Dawson (Rangers); backs, Anderson (Harts), Cumming (Aston Villa); halfbacks, Massie (Aston Villa), Simpson, Brown (Rangers); forwards, Main (Rangers), Walker (Harts), P. O'Donnell (Preston North End), McPhail (Rangers), Duncan (Derby County).

BENEFIT ICE GAME IS SET

Hockey Greats Will Honor Memory of Late 'Howie' Morenz on Tuesday

MONTREAL, Oct. 30 (C)—Men for whom the flaming spirit of 'Howie' Morenz burned brightest will honor his memory at the Forum here Tuesday night in one brief hockey flurry.

A team chosen from the ranks of the Canadiens and the Maroons, clubs of the city which adopted and loved the blazing little man from Stratford, will play a team chosen from the rest of the National League which he helped build. Proceeds of the memorial game will be given to Morenz's widow and her children.

Morenz died March 8 of a heart attack, brought on by an injury received just as he was on the way to a glorious comeback. No hockey player ever has captured the imagination of the public as did Morenz.

And largely through his recovery of the brilliance that made Canadiens brilliant in other years, the Habitant club went to the front of its league division, in the days before his death.

On the Maroon-Canadien team in the memorial game will be Aurel Joliat and Johnny Gagnon, Morenz's forward-line mates, and solemn Will Cude will be in goal. Babe Siebert and Lionel Conacher, the league's Canadian Press all-star defence pair last winter, will play together. Conacher, member-elect to the Ontario Legislature, will come out of retirement for the occasion.

GOLF POSTPONED

The women's monthly medal competition at the Victoria Golf Club has been postponed until Tuesday, November 9. It was announced yesterday. The majority of the members are working on the Community Chest campaign and are unable to compete this week.

Heads Eastern Gridders

Cam Gray, husky backfielder, of Toronto Varsity, has easily maintained his lead in the race for the East's football scoring championship of 1937. Booting four singles in a tie against Western University, Gray held a seven-point edge with the season half over.

University of Toronto Defeats Western Squad

Varsity Registers 7-3 Victory to Tie Up Intercollegiate Union—Argos, Queen's, Hamilton And Imperials All Score Victories

TORONTO, Oct. 30 (C)—University of Toronto moved into a tie for leadership on the Inter-Collegiate Football Union today, handing the Western Mustangs their first defeat of the season. The score was 7-3.

A record crowd of close to 20,000 saw the Blues, held to a 4-4 tie on Western's home grounds last week, score a second-quarter touchdown and hold a determined Western drive in the third quarter to two single points. Each team has won two, lost one and tied one.

After a sleeper forward pass from Barry to Cam Gray netted thirteen yards, big Don Mumford, Varsity's plunging ace, hurdled over in two smashes at the line. Cam Gray, who later kicked a single, converted from placement.

WINS FOURTH STRAIGHT

OTTAWA, Oct. 30 (C)—Toronto Argonauts, only unbeaten and undefeated senior football team in the East, won their fourth straight Big Four triumph today, defeating Ottawa Roughriders, 12-7, in a battle that lacked rough play which featured the Ottawa-Argo game a week ago.

Argos defended successfully a 9-0 lead built up in the first quarter. In that period, Art West ran over the Ottawa goal line for a touchdown on the end of an extension play, and Earl Selkirk kicked the extra point and later place-kicked a field goal.

A fumbled kick near the end gave Argos a safety touch.

QUEEN'S BLANK MCGILL

KINGSTON, Ont., Oct. 30 (C)—Bernie Thornton and Johnny Munro booted Queen's tri-color to a 7-0 inter-collegiate football victory over McGill's Redmen here today. The loss virtually eliminated the Montrealers from the title race.

The tri-color, in winning their second game of the season, both over the Redmen, took advantage of frequent McGill miscues to pile up their score.

NARROW VICTORY

MONTREAL, Oct. 30 (C)—Hamilton Tigers beat down the brilliant overhead attack of Montreal Indians today and won their second straight Big Four triumph, defeating Johnny Ferraro's Montreal team, 3-2. Huck Welch punted all three Tiger points.

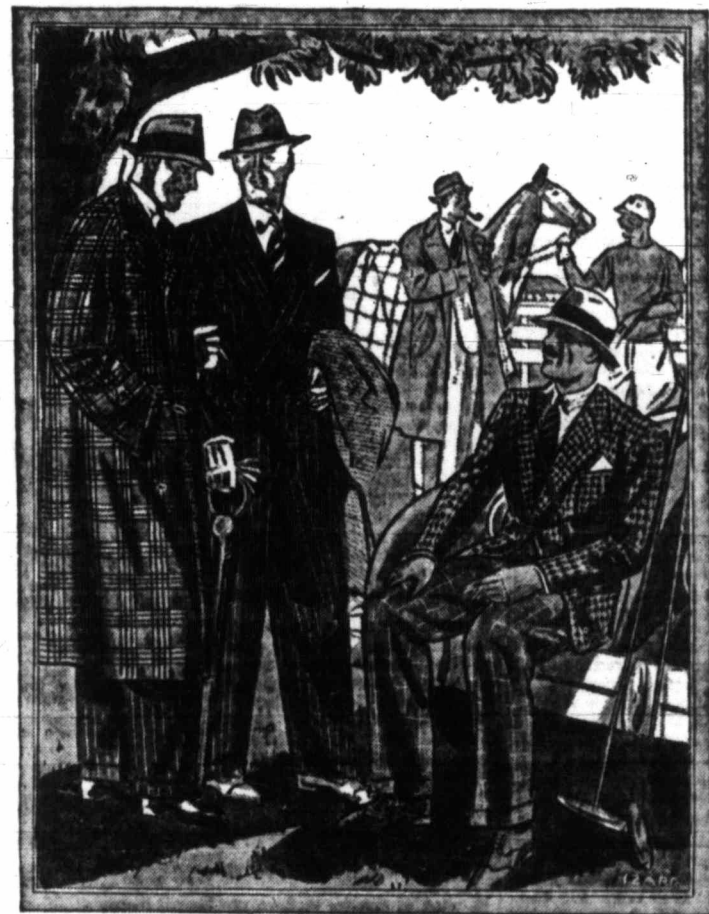

The long-range punting of Welch turned the tide in Hamilton's direction. The Tiger back kicked two singles in the first quarter and, after the Indians had tied the score in the third period, Welch made a third scoring kick.

Montreal's forward pass attack, engineered by Ferraro and Abe Eliowitz, kept Tigers on the defensive much of the time.

IMPERIALS WIN EASILY

HAMILTON, Ont., Oct. 30 (C)—Sarnia Imperials cruised to a 24-6 victory over the hapless Hamilton Panthers in their O.R.F.U. contest here today and drew to within a single victory of their seventh consecutive title. "Bummer" Stirling led the champions on their way.

Stirling, sent into the game in the second quarter, kicked two field goals, scored a touchdown and otherwise was the outstanding player on the field. Ormond Beach, great Imperial plunger, ripped the light Panther line to shreds at times.

TRACK TWINS MAY MAKE SYDNEY TRIP

MEAFORD, Ont., Oct. 30 (C)—It's beginning to look pretty certain Harold Brown will accompany his twin brother, Wallace, to the British Empire Games at Sydney, Australia, next February as a member of Canada's track team.

Interim reports tonight indicated Meaford citizens, proud of their athletic twins, were giving strong financial support to a Chamber of Commerce drive for funds to pay Harold's passage to Australia.

Wallace was chosen by Canada's selection committee to be a member of the team. Harold also was selected, but only if he paid his own expenses.

MOTHERWELL GAINS FIRST DIVISION LEADERSHIP

Draw Against Hibs Places Team Point In Front of Hearts

Lead Changes in Scottish Football After Hard-Fought Matches—Kilmarnock Goalie Breaks Leg and Clyde Fullback Suffers Broken Collar Bone as Teams Play to Two-All Draw

GLASGOW, Oct. 31 (P.)—Anyone laboring under the impression soccer is a tame game would do well to follow the sport from the stands. One glance at Saturday's Scottish League casualty list is enough to convince even the toughest critic.

Clyde and Kilmarnock, lost in the championship shuffle, tangled at Shawfield Park in Glasgow and, although tied in goals, 2-2, after ninety minutes of hard football, the Killies led 2 to 1 in hospital cases. However, the shipbuilders had another player injured who did not require hospital attention.

Heavy rain and mist interfered considerably with the eight matches played. Glasgow Rangers contributed five players to Scotland's cause in their international game against Wales and postponed their match at Aberdeen. A heavy fog halted proceedings at Paisley where St. Mirren and Celtic were scheduled to meet.

RACE IS CLOSE

While Rangers were taking things easy, Motherwell came from behind to tie the Hibernians at Edinburgh, 1-1, and Hearts, without two international stars, downed Hamilton Academicals, 3-2. The championship table now shows Motherwell with twenty-two points, Hearts twenty-one and Rangers twenty. The Pir Parkers have played fifteen matches against fourteen for Hearts and thirteen for the champions.

At Shawfield, supporters were treated to a dashing scoreless first-half display. After the interval, things began to happen and pop-eyed crowd saw a succession of stretchers. Brown, Kilmarnock goalkeeper, suffered a broken leg and Robertson, Clyde's back, had his collar bone broken. On Kilmarnock's forward line, Collins was rushed to hospital with concussion. Hamilton, Clyde forward, was treated in the dressing room for a cut eye. Beaton and Wilson were Clyde's sharpshooters, while Thomson scored the Killies' brace.

Placed near the bottom of the league and given slight chance to hold Motherwell's powerful attack, Hibernians crossed critics with a rock-like defence. After a scoreless opening half, McIntyre raced in to send Hibs into the lead. The visitors applied the pressure and near the end Oglivie netted to salvage a point.

First stanza rushes by Hamilton and Hearts accounted for all five goals. A. Black, the club's leading goal scorer last year, rammed home Hearts' first two goals and Alex Anderson notched the third before Thomson and Wilson netted for the home-towners.

In another Glasgow encounter, Partick Thistle pulled out a narrow 2-1 decision over Falkirk, tied with Aberdeen for sixth position. Watson banged in the only first-half counter for the Thistles. Keyes equalized and Williamson's late-game goal gave Partick both points.

DUNDEE GOES UNDER

Dundee, sensation of the circuit in the early stages of the season, bowed to St. Johnstone by a 4-2 count. McCall, the Saints' most dangerous scoring threat, added three goals to his total, Simpson getting the fourth. Baxter replied for Dundee—one in each half.

Morton's loss column hit the two-figure mark when the newly-promoted eleven lost, 5-4, to Arbroath in the highest-scoring match of both divisions.

The remaining contests ended in draws. Ayr United and Third Lanark each scored once, while Queen's Park and Queen of South battled to a 3-3 deadlock. Queen of South's display was the game on the card, the team erasing a 3-0 first-half lead to get the split in points.

The Second Division standing remained "as you were" when leaders emerged victorious. Raith Rovers defeated Leith Athletic, 3-1; Albion edged out Montrose, 1-0, and St. Bernards thumped Alloa, 6-1.

Split Points With Radicals—North Shore Noses Out St. Saviours

VANCOUVER, Oct. 30 (P.)—St. Andrews and Radicals battled to a 1-1 draw in Vancouver and North Shore defeated St. Saviours, 4-3, at North Vancouver in Mainland soccer league games today.

The two tallies in the game were made in the second half by Laurie Pallot, of the Radicals and Johnny Craig, of St. Andrews.

The Saints lost an opportunity to win the contest a few minutes from time when Ben Hagman missed a penalty kick.

Half-time score at the North Shore and St. Saviours game saw the latter leading 2-1. Alex Christie made the tally for the home team and Jack Muir and Reg Liptrot scored for St. Saviours.

After the interval the Saints claimed their only point on a goal by Ted Enefer as against tallies by Paul Kasolin, Jimmie Spencer and Swede Larson for North Shore.

North Shore's victory was marred, however, when Kasolin was taken to hospital with a head gash suffered in the last half after a collision with Ossie Ross of the Saints. Ross was uninjured.

TABLE TENNIS TOURNAMENT WILL OPEN SHORTLY

City Championships Carded Nov. 11, 12, 13—Entries Close Nov. 9

Victoria's ever-increasing army of table tennis experts will open their bids for the closed city titles at the annual championship tournament to be staged on November 11, 12 and 13. All matches will be played on the tables in the basement of the Westholme Hotel, headquarters of the Victoria Table Tennis League.

Laurie Greenwood, hard-working secretary, announced yesterday that indications point to a record entry, with a number of players making their first appearance in tournament play. With increased facilities at the club's disposal this year, a novice tournament will be operated in conjunction with the regular meet. Players who have not advanced beyond the first round in previous tournaments will be eligible for the novice event.

JUNIOR MEET

Junior players, those under eighteen on November 11 this year, will have a championship tournament all of their own, but young "ping-pongers" who enter this event will also be eligible to compete for other championships. Entries will close on Tuesday, November 9, and may be made at the clubrooms, Westholme Hotel, or by telephoning E 3949.

The following are the titles at stake: Men's singles, women's singles, novice singles, junior singles, men's doubles and mixed doubles.

SCOTTISH XV IN FINE WIN OVER SAILORS

Victors by 13-5 in Senior 'B' Rugby—Duncan Plays Garrison Today

SENIOR "B" LEAGUE	W.	L.	D.	P.	A.	P.
Canadian Scottish	2	0	0	33	8	4
Navy	1	1	0	18	13	2
Duncan	0	1	0	14	0	0

Yesterday's score: Canadian Scottish 13, Navy 5.

Today's game: 3:00—Garrison vs. Duncan, Work Point Barracks.

Coach Henry Cockin's Canadian Scottish oval ball warriors continued their bid for the senior "B" championship, yesterday at MacDonald Park, when they defeated the Navy, 13-5, on the lower ground. Deadlocked, 8-8, going into the final session, "kitties" went over for two tries, the last of which was converted by DeMacedo.

Eric Holyoak gave the Scottish their first points of the encounter when he crashed over following a short run. DeMacedo added the extra points with a fine kick. Navy attacked following the kick-off, and after three or four unsuccessful thrusts deep into Scottish territory Jimmie Arnot scored the Sailors' lone try. Cosier converted from the difficult angle.

WILLARD SCORES TWICE

Doug Willard, promising young backfield star, who has been doing considerable scoring for the Canadian Scottish this season, went over twice in the final half, and DeMacedo made the last of his two kicks good for extra points.

Holyoak, Canadian Scottish player, suffered minor injuries early in the match and spent the remainder of the time on the sidelines, leaving his club with fourteen players.

D'Arcy refereed, and the teams were:

Canadian Scottish—Holyoak, A. Williams, Hamilton, Bray, B. Martin, DeMacedo, F. Mylrea, Coomber, Edmunds, Willard, Knight, Tuthill, S. Martin, J. Mylrea and R. Brown. Navy—Chandler, Downs, Applegarth, Bigelow, Arnot, Cosier, Fest, Little, Mansfield, Armstrong, Stevenson, Dallin, Buckmar, McKeever and Heiberg.

CALIFORNIA WINS GAME

Defeats U.C.L.A. to Remain Unbeaten—Notre Dame Upsets Minnesota

By HERBERT W. BARKER
Associated Press Sports Writer

The United States football rankings have suffered another terrific shake-up, thanks mostly to the combined efforts of the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame, the Owls of Rice, the Engineers of Georgia Tech, and the Quakers of Pennsylvania.

While Baylor in the Southwest, Alabama and Duke in the South, California and Santa Clara of the Far West, and Pitt, Fordham, Villanova and Lafayette in the East, struck new blows yesterday in behalf of an unbeaten season, and the two Ivy League juggernauts, Yale and Dartmouth, battled to a thrilling 9-9 draw, it remained for these four to seal the big headlines.

Given small chance in advance calculations, Notre Dame pushed over a quick touchdown against Minnesota and then set up so stalwart a defence that the Gophers never could get going and dropped their second game of the season, 7-6.

Georgia Tech, rebounding from last week's rout by Auburn, knocked Vanderbilt's Commodores off the unbeaten and untied list with a decisive 14-0 victory.

Auburn, meanwhile, succumbed to an early passing barrage set up by Rice which held on then to win, 14-7. Pennsylvania, trounced by Yale and Columbia and tied by Georgetown, suddenly found the winning combination and toppled Navy, 14-7, in another sensational upset.

Baylor's unchecked Bears hung up their third successive Southwest Conference victory, a 6-0 triumph over battling Texas Christian, Arkansas, the 1936 titleholder, handed Texas A. and M. a 26-13 beating, while Southern Methodist upset Texas, 13-2.

While Vanderbilt was suffering a serious check in its bid for the Southeastern Conference crown, Alabama's crimson tide rolled over Kentucky without visible effort, 41-0. Tennessee spilled Georgia, 32-0, and Tulane won from Mississippi, 14-7, in other conference games. Mississippi State played Centenary to a scoreless tie.

HUSKIES TRIUMPH

Washington Huskies defeated University of Idaho, 21-7, but it took all the regulars and all their ammunition to come from behind for the Coast Conference triumph.

Fifteen thousand spectators cheered the Idaho Vandals when they forged to a 7-2 lead with a sixty-eight-yard march for a touchdown in the first period, and then lustily honored the Husky regulars

Improvement Loan Completes Year

CONSERVE SPACE FOR SMALL ROOM

An idea that is taking hold in home modernization work is the provision of suitable quarters for the maid, where space available is not large, by the use of built-in furniture.

The small room can be made most attractive with a little care in planning. Such a room can also be provided to take care of the growing boy or girl who needs a separate room. A bed can be built in, with useful storage space underneath, such as is found aboard ship, large, roomy drawers being provided. Bookcases, a desk and a drop-leaf table built in will just about take care of any contingency.

If such a room is on the north side of the house, it can be decorated in pastel shades to increase the light value.

With every little effort a cosy and acceptable room can be provided for a maid without infringing upon the privacy of the home quarters of the family.

HOME IMPROVEMENT LOANS NOW TOTAL OVER TEN MILLION

Government Plan Achieves Great Success in Twelve Months of Operation—Over One Dollar per Person Is Borrowed for Renovation and Repair

THE Dominion Government Home Improvement Loan is twelve months old today. November 1, 1936, the plan, whereby householders and property owners all over Canada could apply for loans for renovation and repair, to be repaid out of income, went into action. Since that time the grand total of loans applied for under the scheme reaches over $10,385,000, something more than one dollar for every living soul in the Dominion. This sum does not include loans negotiated by individuals apart from the Home Improvement Plan, or work paid for direct by the home owner. It is estimated that for every dollar taken out under the Home Improvement Loan, three have been spent under ordinary conditions, the interest in renovation and repair being greatly stimulated by the publicity and example found in the Government Plan.

B.C. RANKS HIGH
British Columbia takes a high place among the provinces participating in the plan. In actual figures she ranks third on the list, with a total of $945,515,000. On a per capita basis, which in reality is the only fair way in which to estimate the response of the public, British Columbia comes second, $1.36 to every person in the Province being the average.

These figures prove the success achieved by the Home Improvement Plan. Not only has the way been opened whereby any householder with a sound credit rating may receive funds with which to renovate his home, but the whole countryside has been roused to the wisdom of making timely repairs, improving living conditions, and safeguarding the investment which every dwelling represents. By making the public to the advantages of home improvement, money which otherwise might have lain idle has been placed in circulation. Painters, carpenters and decorators, together with every allied trade, have been set to work, hundreds removed from the relief rolls and conditions bettered through increased purchasing power.

There are few houses over ten years of age that do not need some form of renovation. The cost, though comparatively slight, is often apt to prove a stumbling block to the man who has but a limited cash reserve. The Home Improvement Plan allows him to make application to his local bank and receive the necessary funds, up to $2,000, on terms that range from six months to two years, according to the size and conditions of the loan. There is no unnecessary red tape, and a low discount is charged, making the whole thing simple in the extreme. The only essentials are a good credit rating and ownership of the house or property to be improved, renovated or redecorated. Plumbers, painters, decorators, carpenters and specialists in every line are fully prepared to give complete co-operation in the estimate of the work done and the arrangement of the loan.

HOUSE FIXTURES MUST HARMONIZE

In Building or Remodeling Hardware Should Follow Trend of Period or Design

Those who are building new homes, or remodeling their present ones, would do well to keep in mind that if they are reproducing some definite type of architecture which identified with a period or a locality they should use hardware and lighting fixtures designed correctly for the same style.

It is quite possible to obtain the most modern equipment of this type, made to conform both to present-day usefulness and efficiency and to old-time design.

No matter whether the home owner prefers old English, colonial American, Spanish mission, or any other type of architecture, fixtures are available that will by harmonizing, complete the correctness and attractiveness of the completed home.

The early American strap hinges, H hinges and L hinges and thumb latches are made to simulate those which were made by the blacksmiths. Wall sconces such as were cut from pewter and tin, simply ornamented, to reflect the feeble light of candles, are now made by factory methods for electric lights.

INSULATION NECESSARY FOR HEALTH

As Winter approaches, there is little concern about the problem of keeping heat out of the house. Folks are too busy thinking about how to keep heat in. Still keeping heat out and keeping heat in are twin problems, therefore, best discussed together. And though Winter is the season to plan for at this time, Summer will soon follow.

To begin: Your home should be well ventilated, whatever the season. But this does not mean that you should allow unregulated drafts of wintry air to blow through your house and give everybody a cold in the head. Weather stripping of doors and windows is your best insurance against such a possibility.

WEATHER STRIPPING
In the Winter, warm air escapes from the house through loose windows and doors, and is immediately replaced by cold air from the outside. As a consequence, the heating plant must be pushed to capacity to maintain even room temperatures throughout the house. Fuel is used up quickly under those conditions.

Even this it is not always possible to counterbalance strong winds and keep the house warm. Weather stripping is the cure. Weather stripping of doors and windows provides great comfort, and soon pays for itself in reduced fuel bills. The most satisfactory metal, wooden or felt weather strips can be installed at low cost.

In weather-stripping a door, it is necessary for a tight contact. If the threshold is badly worn, it should be replaced with a new one. Bedroom doors should also be weather-stripped to prevent drafts and the escape of heat from the rest of the house when bedroom windows are left open. Weather stripping on the door leading from living-rooms to the basement helps to keep out dust, gases and laundry odors.

When damp spots appear on the interior surfaces of walls, the cause, contrary to general opinion, is not leakage through the wall paper. Most of the trouble is usually found around window frames, poorly built or weather-proofed. These frames admit air and moisture, which may strain the adjoining interior walls or work along inside the wall and make a spot on the plaster surface several feet distant.

If there are leakages around a window frame, a careful examination should be made. Repairs should be taken care of where needed.

FROSTED WINDOWS
Frosting on the inner surface of window panes not only obstructs vision, but, when it melts, runs down over the woodwork and plaster, and does considerable damage. Weather stripping and tight storm sash will prevent frost from forming.

In especially cold climates, storm windows are very helpful. Sometimes it is necessary to provide them only for the side of the house facing the predominant winter winds. Storm windows, too, will soon pay for themselves in savings on fuel.

"SWEATING" WALLS
During the winter months, some walls are seen to "sweat." The dampness, often loosens and stains wallpaper, or damages other wall decorations. This dampness may not come from the outside, but may result from condensation of moisture from the air in the room upon the cold surfaces of plaster. It is dangerous to reduce the room humidity too much, in that a certain degree of humidity is essential to good health. Instead, walls should be insulated against the chilling effects of outside temperatures. This weather-proofing, or insulating, may be done at moderate cost.

INSULATING ATTIC
When there is a difference in temperature between two sides of a wall, or a roof, heat passes from the warmer to the cooler side. In that the roof is the most exposed part of the house, it is apparent that the attic, if unfinished, will lose a serious amount of heat in the winter, and permit a still more serious amount of heat to enter in the summer. The former is expensive; the latter is distinctly unpleasant. It is, therefore, important that the roof or upper story of the house be insulated,

HOW DO YOU KNOW THAT INSULATING YOUR HOME WILL MAKE IT MORE COMFORTABLE?

Of course it will. But remember that there are many ways to "half-insulate" your home... only one fully tested and approved way to give you full 100% of the comfort and fuel savings you have a right to expect. That way is through the use of famous Johns-Manville Full-Thick Rock Wool Home Insulation—correctly applied by expert workmen in line with the Johns-Manville specifications. Insulation is an investment. If you invest wisely, it will pay you lifetime dividends. Don't take chances... let us give you the facts before you buy. There is no obligation.

Don't put in another winter with a faulty heating system, a jittery roof or uninsulated walls that let the heat out and the cold in. Make your home cozier and more livable—as so many others have done—without financial strain. Do it with the magic of the Home Improvement Plan and, at the same time, put men to work.

Select the improvement you need most—inside or outside painting, a modern kitchen, insulation, a new furnace, up-to-the-minute plumbing or the building of an attic playroom or basement game room for indoor days, and get an estimate of its cost. You will be surprised at how readily these and many other desirable improvements will fit into your budget.

LOANS EASILY ARRANGED
Any contractor, supply firm or architect can help you arrange a Home Improvement Plan loan if you need it to finance the work for you, or you can apply direct to your banker. No security or endorsement needed: you simply show that you can repay in monthly instalments and the loan is made, the work proceeds, your home is made brighter and more livable and men get needed jobs.

Plays and Players

Shirley Temple Plays Loving Role in "Heidi"

Millions the world over have been enthralled by the warmth, the tenderness and the charming beauty of Johanna Spyri's beloved story of Heidi and all the colorful folk who lived and laughed and loved high up in the Swiss Alps, just beneath the stars. Translated into all languages and read everywhere, it is a story that had to wait for its star before it could be brought to the screen. The Twentieth Century-Fox production of "Heidi," starring Shirley Temple, shows for the last times tomorrow at the Dominion Theatre.

On a novel set depicting the colorful Zuyder Zee, Shirley and a large chorus enact an elaborate dance sequence, with special routines arranged by Sammy Lee. Shirley also sings the grand new novelty tune, "In Our Little Wooden Shoes," written by Lew Pollack and Sidney D. Mitchell.

FOUR ACTRESSES ARE CO-STARRED

Famous Stars Play in "Ladies in Love" Coming to Oak Bay Screen

Only the four famous actresses appearing in the new Twentieth Century-Fox picture, "Ladies in Love," which starts tomorrow at the Oak Bay Theatre, could so excitingly present this butte-sweet romance of their adventures and disillusion in search of love.

Janet Gaynor, Loretta Young and Constance Bennett are starred and Simone Simon featured in the most brilliant array of feminine personalities ever assembled in one picture, with Don Ameche, Paul Lukas, Tyrone Power and Alan Mowbray heading the cast.

Darryl F. Zanuck, chieftain of the Twentieth Century-Fox studios, appointed Edward H. Griffith to direct the film and B. G. DeSylva associate producer.

PLAZA TO OFFER "WOMAN ALONE"

Sylvia Sidney and Oscar Homolka Appear in Film Depicting Terrorist Activities

Briefly, "The Woman Alone," which opens tomorrow at the Plaza Theatre, describes the activities of a band of terrorists whose unwilling accomplice causes the horrible death of his young brother-in-law. He is, in turn, murdered by the wife, who becomes crazed by the tragedy.

Sylvia Sidney, recently seen in "Fury," has the role of Sylvia Verloc, pretty wife of the movie exhibitor, who is really a saboteur. Oscar Homolka is the stolid, political-minded husband whose mysterious sallies bring sudden death to his wife's little brother. Desmond Tester, the boy king of "Nine Days a Queen," has the juvenile lead, while John Loder plays a Scotland Yard detective and masquerades as a poor shopkeeper.

"The Woman Alone" is an Alfred Hitchcock directed picture, adapted from a Joseph Conrad novel.

BRILLIANT ARTISTS TO APPEAR IN CITY

By extending their activities to this city, Hilker Attractions, well-known Vancouver concert management, has made it possible for Victoria theatre-goers to look forward to a brilliant musical season.

Opening the season will be the outstanding European dancer from Salzburg, Austria, who will appear December 3 in the Royal Victoria Theatre.

Owing to a delay in completion of arrangements here, it was found impossible to present Gladys

Plaza—Sylvia Sidney in "The Woman Alone."

Swathout before her Vancouver engagement as Hilker Attractions had planned. Igor Gorin, sensational young Russian baritone, will be heard as a mid-January presentation. Other equally outstanding artists to appear will be announced shortly, to give Victoria a well-rounded season of celebrity concerts.

Complete details will be published in due course. Brian Burdon-Murphy, as local manager, will be in complete charge of all concerts.

WARNER BAXTER IN LEADING ROLE

"Wife, Doctor and Nurse" Also Presents Loretta Young and Virginia Bruce

"Wife, Doctor and Nurse," witty penetrating Twentieth Century-Fox hit starring Loretta Young, Warner Baxter and Virginia Bruce, whose talents are brilliantly blended together in one of the year's most exceptional pictures, opens tomorrow at the Atlas Theatre.

"Wife, Doctor and Nurse" presents a new treatment of a situation which often arises in daily business life, where the wife finds that her husband has a feminine helpmate in his business or profession who, through years of close association, has become an essential part of his life.

Jane Darwell, Sidney Blackmer, Maurice Cass, Minna Gombell and Margaret Irving are featured in the notable supporting cast.

SHE MEANT WELL

A visitor found the young wife pouring whiskey down the sink, bottle after bottle.

"For goodness sake, why pour that whiskey away?" asked the visitor, aghast.

"Oh, it's quite all right. I heard my husband say to his guests last night that it was some very old stuff," was the smiling reply.

British Conductor to Appear Here

DR. BASIL CAMERON

ONCE more the Seattle Symphony Orchestra, with its eminent British conductor, Dr. Basil Cameron, will visit this city to give a concert Tuesday evening, November 30. Its brilliant concert last season is well remembered, and the peerless musicianship of its conductor is sure to weave its spell on those who will be present on the forthcoming occasion. Many new symphonic works are under consideration, and one or two of the recent "requests" will be included in a specially selected programme. Seats may now be booked by the usual procedure of sending a self-addressed envelope to the manager, Royal Victoria Theatre. Further particulars may be had by telephoning G. J. Dyke at G Garden 6984.

Robert Taylor and Loretta Young Have Leads in Picture "Private Number"

Starring an exciting new love team, handsome Robert Taylor and lovely Loretta Young, "Private Number" opens tomorrow at the Columbia Theatre.

Taylor's debonair manners and youthful banter complements Miss Young's beauty and wide-eyed appeal perfectly. And, added to the thrilling love story, is suspense, drama and comedy by the irrepressible Patsy Kelly. Basil Rathbone and Marjorie Gateson are also featured prominently in the supporting cast.

"Private Number" was directed by Roy Del Ruth, with Raymond Griffith associate producer. The screen story was written by Gene Markey and William Conselman, based on a play by Cleves Kinkaid.

WHY MOTHERS GO GREY

Mother (admonishing small son): "And don't forget I'm your mother." Small Son: "Yes, but I do wish you wouldn't keep swanking about it."

Paul Muni Starred in Attraction at Capitol

One of the most notorious scandals in modern history supplies the motivation for the second great Warner Bros. picture within a year based upon the life of a famous Frenchman.

The picture is "The Life of Emile Zola," and the scandal is that surrounding the conviction and imprisonment of Captain Alfred Dreyfus on Devil's Island, on a trumped-up charge that he had sold important army secrets to Germany. The picture will open tomorrow at the Capitol Theatre.

Not only the great success of "The Story of Louis Pasteur," with Paul Muni in the title role, but also the powerful drama of Zola's picturesque career as a moulder of public opinion in France, influenced the studio in making this picture. Muni, who won the Academy award for his Pasteur effort, also has the title role in "Zola."

Joseph Schildkraut, boyhood friend of Muni in Vienna, has the role of Dreyfus.

There are many notable players in the cast, in addition to Muni and Schildkraut.

Prices Go Lower In Dull Session On Wall Street

NEW YORK, Oct. 30 (AP).—Many pivotal issues slipped a trifle lower in an indecisive abbreviated session of the stock market today.

No particular trend was apparent, and trading was at a fairly slow pace through most of the day, with the ticker frequently at a standstill.

Steel shares proved the most hesitant, although one or two closed higher. The rails, in spite of the decision of carrier executives to ask a new blanket increase in freight rates, were narrow and mixed. A few amusement and specialty stocks moved higher.

The Associated Press average of sixty stocks dropped 1/4 of a point at 50.2. Transfers totaled 713,910 shares against 1,569,020 last Saturday.

Some lower-priced railroad lines recorded most gains in a quiet and generally steady bond market Saturday. Federal loans were in light demand and tended a little lower.

South American issues received support with Uruguay 8s, Argentine 4s, Brazil 6 1/2s and Chile 6s, of 1936, up fractions to around a point. Japanese corporate obligations improved.

NARROW GAINS IN TORONTO MARKET

TORONTO, Oct. 31. — Industrial and gold closed the week with narrow gains predominating, while the miscellaneous index of the Toronto Exchange was down slightly, due mainly to weakness in the Western oil group. A rally in the last few minutes of trading more than erased the early losses in the golds.

Walkers common and Distillers' Seagrams gained more than a point. Steels, foods and utilities held their ground or improved narrowly and the papers recorded few and narrow changes. Steel of Canada closed 2 points up and Pressed Metals 3 points higher.

The close was down for Ford "A" and higher for Canadian Pacific Railway, Brazilian and the senior oils. British American, Imperial Oil, International Petroleum and McColl common firmed 1/4 to 1/2. Weakness ruled the Western issues. Royalty backed up 2 1/2 to 32 on sale of some odd lots and losses of 6 to 17 cents were showing finally for Calgary & Edmonton, Calmont, Home, Model, Okalta and Vulcan.

Eldorado was up 10 cents. Gains of small fractions opened for Smelters, Nickel and Noranda.

A GOOD FIT
The teacher was trying to give her small pupils a mental picture of a barrel without disclosing the name of the article.

"The object I have in mind," she explained, "is large and round, being nearly as big one way as the other, and, if laid on its side and started at the top of a hill, it would roll to the bottom." Now, who can tell what it is?"

A little hand went up, and the teacher said: "All right, Marjorie, what do you think I was describing?"

"My daddy!" came the unexpected reply.

MAKING OF FEEDER LINE REQUESTED
REGINA, Oct. 30 (P).—Outcome of representations made by the Boards of Trade of four major cities, Friday, the Saskatchewan Government today forwarded a request to Ottawa for the inauguration of a feeder air mail line linking Regina, via Moose Jaw and Saskatoon, with Prince Albert, from which point an air mail service now enters the province's new mineral areas.

MARINE, RAIL and AIR

Empress of Japan Out Last Evening For Distant Ports

Big White Liner Had Fair Number of Passengers For Various Pacific Points Aboard, Several Seasoned Travelers Being on the List

Docking here at 5 o'clock last evening, the Canadian Pacific liner Ss. Empress of Japan, Captain L. D. Douglas, R.N.R., commander, sailed for Honolulu, her first port of call on her way to Manila, at 6 p.m. The liner took out a total list of 350 travelers, a large number of whom joined her here, principally for Hawaii, where others will embark for Far East destinations.

Among the passengers going aboard here were Dr. and Mrs. F. P. Simpson, for Hongkong; Mr. and Mrs. G. O. Rockholz and son, for Hongkong; Mrs. H. M. Selby-Hall and Mrs. M. Cusati, Hongkong; Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Gale, for Shanghai via Kobe; Mr. L. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Rees, the Misses A. Pearce, G. and L. Jordan and Mrs. S. Clayton, all for Honolulu.

Other travelers sailing on the Japan included C. A. Banks, New Guinea mining man, who will travel on the liner as far as Honolulu; E. S. Richards, Standard Vacuum Oil Company, Manila; Charles Blefield, of Blefield & Goodfriend, New York importers, going to Yokohama; Dr. and Mrs. Chester N. Frazier, the former being a member of the Union Medical College of Peiping; David P. Drummond, Oriental manager for the Canadian Pacific at Hongkong, and Mrs. Drummond; and L. H. Burnett, Shanghai representative of the Pemberton & Penn Tobacco Company, of Virginia.

Also on the ship were Major G. S. M. Hutchinson, official of the Colonial Office, London, on a tour of the world; Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Stiles, the former being Far Eastern representative of T. Eaton & Company; Mr. and Mrs. G. Guggenheim, the former making his fifty-first crossing of the Pacific; Mr. and Mrs. W. Barclay, the former being connected with the Powell River Company, bound for Honolulu; Mr. and Mrs. Murray Crehan, Vancouver, who will holiday in Hawaii; and Charles A. Perkes, veteran freight traffic man of the Pacific Coast and associated with the Dollar Line for more than twenty years, who was recently appointed Far Eastern representative of United Air Lines, proceeding to the Orient to open the first United States air transport office.

SPORTS EDITOR
James P. Dawson, sports editor of The New York Times, will vacation in Honolulu. Starting as a copy-boy on the great journal twenty-nine years ago, he has been with it ever since. He has sixty-two regular men working under him in the sports department of the paper, he stated. Asked to give his impressions of the Giants-Yankees baseball series, he side-stepped the question, but appeared to be disappointed over the showing of the National League team. Mr. Dawson's particular work is covering the big state events, and he has many friends among the leather pushers. He exhibits a costly gold watch which was presented to him by Jack Dempsey. He preferred not to discuss the fight situation in New York, he said, but admitted that Joe Louis had evidently been a very much overrated fighter.

Talking about Lester Patrick, Mr. Dawson said the Victorian was very popular in New York. New Yorkers also like the fiery spirit of Lynn Patrick, who is playing hockey for the Rangers; but don't appreciate it when he lets himself go in the excitement of play and leaves the ice to mix it with spectators who occasionally ride him and his teammates.

NEWSPAPERMAN
W. E. Hutchinson, who has been with The Boston Transcript for six years, was a passenger aboard the Empress of Japan going through to the Hawaiian Islands, where he will take a post with The Honolulu Advertiser. He was looking forward to his new position eagerly, although the life in Hawaii will be in decided contrast to that of Boston, he realizes. Before leaving the East, Mr. Hutchinson was married, and the trip to the Coast and Honolulu he considered might well be called a honeymoon journey.

RETURNING HOME
One of China's most prominent businessmen went out on the Canadian Pacific liner Ss. Empress of Japan last evening. Chung How Yok, who passed through Victoria some months ago for Detroit, where he placed his son in Detroit University, was pleased to hear that the men who had been trapped in the Chapel fighting had managed to reach sanctuary in the International Settlement. He has great hopes that his countrymen will continue to resist the Japanese invasion and believes if they remain

United there is a possibility of China emerging from the conflict stronger than the most sanguine admirer of her courage can conceive at the present time.

EARLY TOMORROW
Coming in from the Philippines by way of China and Japan ports, the Canadian Pacific liner Ss. Empress of Asia is due to reach William Head at 5:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, according to advices received from the ship by James Macfarlane, local agent for the line. The Asia should dock at Rithet Piers about 7 a.m.

Strange Creature Is Swallowed by Whale

Although considerably smaller than the reputed descriptions of Cadborosaurus, the object found last Summer in the stomach of a sperm whale when it was opened at Naden Harbor, Queen Charlotte Islands, is not unlike what "Caddy" was represented to be by those who claimed to have seen it swimming off Victoria. This "serpent" has a head similar to a large dog, animal-like vertebrae, and a tail resembling a single blade of gill-bone, like that found in the jaws of certain species of whales. When removed from the whale, the strange object was partly digested, and consequently difficult to classify.

CAT TRAVELS FIRST CLASS

Panama City Woman Pays Top Price for Passage Of Her Pet

NEW YORK, Oct. 30 (P).—As sole occupant of a first-class stateroom and bath, Prince Rahula and his nine lives sailed aboard the Ss. Virginia today on his way to Panama City.

Chaperoning the prince was the ship's butcher, selected from the whole crew to see his highness gets his raw liver and warm milk regularly; for the prince, being the scion of a royal line of Siamese cats, is very particular about his diet.

Louise Frith, Bar Harbor, Me., shipped the cat in her $125 stateroom to Mrs. Charles A. Latham, Panama City.

FILM'S FUNNY PAIR INFRINGED COPYRIGHT
LOS ANGELES, Oct. 30 (P).—A Federal Court jury found Graccho and Chico Marx film comedians, guilty today of infringing on a copyright in last year's radio broadcast. Conviction carries with it penalty of not more than $1,000 fine or not more than a year in jail. Judge George Cosgrave set sentencing for next Monday. Defence attorneys said they would seek a new trial.

WARD ONE LIBERALS
There will be a special meeting of Ward One at Liberal headquarters on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock sharp, when delegates in good-standing will be selected for the nominating convention for the Federal bye-election. Applications for membership will close Wednesday at 5 p.m. until November 6, and must be in the hands of the secretary.

Lost Its Propeller
NEW YORK, Oct. 30 (P).—The British steamship Lord Byron sent out a call for assistance from a point about thirty miles east of New York. MacKay Radio reported today. The ship has lost its propeller.

Aakre Leaking Badly
SAINT JOHN, N.B., Oct. 30 (P).—Agground since early Thursday on Temple Ledge, between Whitehead Island and Cheyne Island, southeast of Grand Manan, the Norwegian motorship Aakre, bound from Saint John to Buenos Aires with 80,000 crates of New Brunswick seed potatoes, was reported to be leaking badly.

Scout News and Notices
ST. MARY'S GROUP
Over seventy Cubs, Scouts, Rovers and leaders of St. Mary's Group took part in an enjoyable Halloween party Friday at headquarters on Granite Street. The group was divided into four large patrols for the evening. Various games were enjoyed, one being a "ducking" contest for candies in a bowl of flour. Following the games, refreshments, which included buns, cake and candies, were served. A short sing-song, led by the assistant scoutmasters, closed the evening. Six Cubs from both the South and Third Packs left their respective packs to become recruits in the troop. The Eagle patrol leader was presented with a small shield, emblematic of winning the patrol competition for the past two months' period.

NORTH QUADRA GROUP
The North Quadra group committee will hold a Halloween tea and bazaar in the North Quadra Scout Hall, 3252 Glasgow Avenue, on Tuesday, which will be opened at 2:30 p.m. by Mr. C. H. Hensley, president of the Boy Scouts Association, Victoria District.

IRON IN THE BEETS
SCOTTSBLUFF, Neb., Oct. 30 (P).—Sugar factories are complaining of too much iron in beets they use. Menaces to slicing knives found in the tubers include a horseshoe, a pair of pliers and a wrench.

NURSING SERVICE DOES GOOD WORK

Annual Reports on Health Condition of Children in Esquimalt Heard

The annual meeting of the Esquimalt Rural Nursing Service was held in the Women's Institute Hall at Langford on Thursday evening. Mr. E. J. Taylor presided and Mr. H. A. Hincks gave an excellent secretary's report and financial statement which had been audited by Mr. Frank Smedley.

A letter from Dr. J. F. Grant, health officer, was read; in this he thanked the people and the societies in the district for their co-operation and suggested that an effort be made to provide milk for certain children who showed signs of malnutrition.

THANKS TENDERED

Mr. Hincks also reported that Dr. Amyot had not been able to attend this meeting, but would address a meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association on November 10. Mr. Taylor, on behalf of the nursing service and the nurses, thanked the P.T.A.s, the Women's Institutes and Welfare Association for helping with child clinics under Dr. Newby, newly formed dental clinics under Dr. McCarter and the distribution of clothing, etc., to needy families.

Miss Dora Wilkie, R.N., B.Sc., gave her report of visits made, and the various duties which constitute the work of the public health nurse, stating that although the nursing district includes Langford, Happy Valley and Goldstream, many calls for help are received outside of the district and these are taken care of.

COUNCIL MEMBERS

The following members were elected to the district council: For Luxton and Happy Valley, Mrs. Blenkinsop, Miss M. Hall and M. A. Morrow; for Langford, Mrs. H. Simpson, Miss Savory and E. Levesque; for Goldstream, Mrs. Saul and Mr. Couchman; auditor, F. Smedley.

During a discussion concerning the dental clinic, a letter from Dr. H. E. Young was read which suggested that the people of the district try themselves to help finance the dentist for the sake of those children whose parents were unable to pay for proper treatment.

ADDRESSES GIVEN

Dr. Richard Felton, Victoria city health officer, gave an interesting address on "The Causes of Death."

Dr. H. E. Young spoke briefly upon the success of British Columbia methods in health work which he claimed have been copied all over the country. He also paid tribute to the work of Miss Wilkie, and on behalf of the nursing service, presented her with a beautiful corsage bouquet and congratulated her upon receiving the degree of B.Sc. at the University of British Columbia. Refreshments were served by the committee at the end of the meeting.

Chase Mechanics of Russian Party Engaged in Search for Lost Countrymen

BARLOW, Alaska, Oct. 30 (P).—Four wolves chased Russian party mechanics at 6 a.m. (9 a.m. P.S.T.), today as they walked to the landing field to warm up their big plane for a fifth attempt to cross the fog-shrouded Endicott Mountains to Fairbanks.

They awakened the signal corps wireless operator, Master Sergt. Stanley Morgan, and the party armed itself, but the wolves had disappeared.

The plane, engaged in the search for a Soviet trans-Polar flight party missing since August 13, has been turned back by thick weather on each attempt to reach Fairbanks for mechanical overhaul. It flew today at 20,000 feet to avoid storms over the mountains.

Kendall's Laboratories —A Public Service

In repairing the Radios in use in hundreds of homes in Victoria, Mr. Kendall has often noticed the very high number of cases where the owner has chosen a complete misfit, owing to lack of information as to the suitability of the radio to his home and locality.

No one would think of purchasing reading glasses exclusively by the style of the frames. On the contrary, an optometrist with years of training is called in to choose the correct glasses for each person.

Exhaustive tests are being made at his laboratories on the 169 different radio sets made for the 1938 season. These tests, backed by years of training, enable buyers to make a correct selection of their radio.

The suitability and characteristics of the various radios now being offered to the public will be discussed from time to time.

Watch this column: it will prove to be of great interest. And consult Kendall before you buy.

MAINLAND HOOP SEASON STARTED

VANCOUVER, Oct. 30 (P).—Westerns defeated Staceys 42-28 and Munros edged out Ryersons 27-21 in the last minutes of the game to-night as the Inter-City Basketball League launched its 1937-38 schedule. Westerns, practically the same team that played under the name of Forts last year, had little trouble with Staceys, former Province team. With the aid of Wally Myers, who marked up thirteen points, Westerns led their opponents 26-11 at halftime and were never headed.

Munro, however, just managed to edge out the fast Ryerson squad in the last minutes of the game with a rally sparked by Bill McLaughlin, who scored a total of thirteen points. Ryersons led by a single point, 17-16, at halftime, in the tight, nip-and-tuck battle.

Child Sustains Burns to Hands

Hawthorne Hill, Hyacinth Avenue, Marigold, sustained burns to his hands while playing with fireworks last evening and was taken to Jubilee Hospital, where, at a late hour last night, he was reported to be resting comfortably.

FOUR SOLOISTS FOR "MESSIAH" SELECTED

The soloists selected for the fourth annual performance of the "Messiah" by the Victoria Choral and Orchestra Union on December 8 next, are: Miss Dorothy Parsons, soprano; Mrs. Burton Kurth, Vancouver, contralto; Leonard Hayman, Vancouver, tenor; and Mark Daniels, Portland, bass.

"This is an unusually fine group of soloists and should give a splendid interpretation of the work," states George Phillips, secretary of the recital committee.

The chorus and orchestra combined will total 250 voices and instruments for this year's annual performance.

ORDER GIVEN FOR NEW GAS HOLDER

Contract for $35,000 Structure Here Placed by Local Company With English Firm
Contract for a new gas holder, with a capacity of 200,000 cubic feet, has been placed with Robert Dempster & Sons, Yorkshire, England, at an approximate contract price of $35,000. A. T. Goward, vice-president of the B.C. Electric Railway Company, Ltd., announced yesterday. The holder will have two lifts, and provision will be made for a third to be added at some future date. The inner lift will be spiral guided, and the outer, column guided. The holder will take place of that destroyed by fire in 1936, which was built by Dely & Fowler, Philadelphia, in 1890. The original brick tank and metal columns, left intact after the fire, will be utilized in the new construction. It is said. The holder will soon be completed and is expected here early in the new year. It will be placed into service in April or in May. The present spiral-guided holder, which has a capacity of 500,000 cubic feet, was also built by Robert Dempster & Sons, and was placed into service in 1924.

Staff Sergeant Warburton will prepare absentee rolls. The corps quartermaster sergeant will attend the commandant during his inspection.

Quartermaster Stores—The quartermaster sergeant will check all issues of clothing and equipment. He will produce his books for inspection by the commandant before the end of the week.

Leave of Absence—Commissionaire Hardy having obtained extra-regimental employment, is granted leave of absence during that employment.

Recruits—The adjutant will interview intending recruits between the hours of 10 a.m. and 12 noon daily. H. H. B. CUNNINGHAM, Lieut.-Colonel (Adjutant).

AFT
An Irishman was traveling in a train, accompanied by a minister, when two very stout ladies entered their compartments. They placed themselves one on each side of Pat, and he got crushed between them.

The minister, seeing his plight, said: "Pat, are you sure you are content?"

Pat quickly replied: "Shure, yer honor, I haven't much room to grumble."

Here is a surgeon's prescription now dispensed by chemists at trifling cost.

Not only does this great healing antiseptic oil promote rapid and healthy healing in open sores, wounds, but boils and simple ulcers are relieved and cleared healed.

In skin diseases the itching of Eczema is instantly stopped. Pimples—skin eruptions dry up and scale off in a very few days. The same is true of Barber's Itch, Salt Rheum and other inflammatory skin disorders.

Polishing Pebbles

"A BEAUTIFUL COLLECTION"

A NEW hobby has made its appearance on the horizon of public fancy, and is slowly rising to a point, like the sun, where it will be seen and appreciated by all. It would not be correct to term it a new hobby. Nothing could be farther from the truth, literally. It is just one of those things that makes its appearance in cycles.

Like drawing, carving and other arts, stone polishing can be traced back to primeval man. There is every indication that thousands of years ago, or more, the cave man diligently rubbed pebbles or small stones on some abrasive material until a fanciful pattern in the rock danced before his delighted eyes. Proud of his workmanship he doubtless placed it on some conspicuous ledge where his hairy neighbors would be sure to admire it.

However, stone polishing dropped out of sight to reappear and then disappear time and time again. Europeans, in the Middle Ages, seem responsible for the re-appearance of the hobby. But it was not termed a hobby in those times. It was a cleverly guarded trade of highly paid artisans, who handed their secret down from generation to generation.

In the United States and England the fad caught on and became popular. There are three publications issued on the monthly pastime, one in Portland, Oregon; another in New York, and a third in London, England. In the Oregon metropolis there are some 150 amateur polishers, and five professional shops employing from two to six men. Other states in the union have accepted the possibilities offered by this interesting pastime and are producing many stone-polishing experts.

Starts in Victoria

VICTORIA seems to be setting the pace for British Columbia, if not the rest of Canada. It might be timely to mention here the local pioneers of this hobby—those veterans who first realized the enjoyment of grinding a piece of stone. The late Col. Charles B. Schriber, of Sooke, who passed away recently at an advanced age, and John F. Bledsoe, started the hobby in this city about two years ago. Since that time they have passed on their knowledge to others interested in the pastime, and as a result stone polishing had taken a firm root here.

Merely collecting and polishing the stones for their beauty alone, to be displayed in a glass case, is not the whole idea of the hobby. Settings for rings, or brooches, and almost any type of jewelry may be fashioned from a seemingly unattractive stone, in the hands of a clever artisan.

The real thrill derived from this fascinating pastime, according to one of the veterans, is watching a thing of beauty and color grow from a stone which may have been picked up on almost any beach. Sometimes it might be necessary to "slab the stone" as the experts say—that is, cutting a slice off of it with a diamond saw, a metal disc into which diamond dust has been pounded. Often colors of untold beauty and weird kaleidoscopic markings are uncovered in this manner.

Among the types of stones which the hobbyists seek are jasper, chalcedony, agates, varying from moonstones to charnelians, very hard clay stones, jadeites and plasma. Amber, moon and striped agates are found mostly in the vicinity of Sooke. Jadeite stones were used by the Indians in the interior of the Province to make tools and weapons, many types of which are now on display in the Provincial Museum. This stone is exceedingly hard.

Jaspers vary in color from white to black, with a predominance of red tints. Other popular shades are yellow and orange. Plasma is a green stone and is also found in the interior.

Pebbles Carried Here

RATHER interesting geological fact Mr. Bledsoe brought to the writer's attention, and one of which many may not be aware, is that all these stones were brought here by glacial action; no mother stones being found in this district.

At Muir Creek, between Sooke and Jordan River, there is a bank 100 feet high, composed of glacial clay and pebbles. If you dig into this bank, Mr. Bledsoe says, you will find pebbles just as well shaped and rounded as any you might pick up on the beaches. This proves that the stones did not receive their shaping by being pounded on the beach, but that they were all carried here, probably thousands of years ago, by a glacier.

There are two methods used for polishing stones; the wet and the dry. The latter method is reported to be used by the majority of professional and amateur polishers throughout the United States. Its apostles claim it is faster, removes all scratches from the stone, gives a finer polish, and also eliminates the use of pumice. In the wet method all the grinding wheels pass over damp sponges which hold all particles of fine dust.

In order to get a better idea of the procedure through which an expert goes in polishing a stone, let us trace the steps taken in the conversion of an ordinary pebble into a shaped and shining ornament of beauty.

Wetting for Color

A ROUGH idea of what the stone will look like when polished may be gained by wetting it. This brings out the colors and gives the surface a glossy appearance. A three-cornered file can be used to test the hardness of the stone. The harder it is the higher the polish it will take. If it is too big or rough to begin grinding, much valuable time is saved by shaping it with the diamond saw.

It is now time to bring the grinding wheels into action. These are fitted on the work bench and run by a small electric motor which can be slipped into position behind any one of the wheels, on a metal track, and the driving belt connected. The first wheel is coarse carborundum, varying from 80 to 220 grain. The next step is to polish the stone on a wheel covered with sandpaper, 180 and 220 grade. From this wheel the stone is polished on the tin oxide wheel.

The wet method is a slightly longer procedure. From the coarse grinding wheel, the stone is polished on a fine carborundum one of 220 grit, which takes out scratches. From here the polisher shapes it against the mud grinders. These are felt-faced wheels which are painted over with carborundum grains, one fine and the other double fine. The process is completed on the buffers, two hard cotton buffing wheels. The coarser one is charged with pumice powder and the finer with oxide of tin. When the stone to be polished is too small to be held in the fingers, it is cemented on a "dop" stick.

Hobby Not Expensive

OF course, the reader doubtless has received the impression that polishing stones is only for those who have expensive equipment. This is not necessarily the case, for after the preliminary cost of installing the grinding stones and bench, all the materials to be worked with are supplied by nature.

Like stamp collecting, photography, wood-carving or almost any other hobby, it can be made expensive, depending on the means of the person planning to take it up. But it can be enjoyed at comparatively little cost. An investment of $30, or slightly less, and an apprentice can begin his stone-polishing career. More elaborate equipments cost as high as $100. E. N. Chambers has built many of the local polishing machines, incorporating advanced ideas of his own or some improvement suggested by polishers.

It might be interesting to mention some of the local polishers and their connection with the hobby. Marc Preiswerk and Art Davies, who use the same machine, are two enthusiastic members of this growing profession. Both have been at it for almost two years and have become proficient in the art. Davies also holds the distinction of being the youngest stone polisher in the city.

H. B. Forster and W. J. MacAllan also pass many pleasant hours appraising and polishing stones. Mr. Forster, who has a good collection of both local and foreign stones, has a machine working on a slightly different principle from the usual. All the grinding wheels revolve at the same time. Mr. MacAllan, on the other hand, does all his polishing on a one-armed machine. However, in the latter case it is necessary to stop and change each grinder as the polishing of the stone progresses.

Mr. Bledsoe's first association with collecting stones dates back to 1876, when he was acting as a guide for a German and a party prospecting for agates and other semi-precious stones near the Sweetwater River, in Wyoming. The party was successful in finding many agates and sapphires of various colors and some fine petrified woods, there being a decided vogue for agate jewelry, in the forms of pins, brooches and bracelets in those days. However, the Sioux Indians were on the warpath in Wyoming so the party was escorted to safer territory by Uncle Sam's soldiers, thus terminating the expedition's search.

Time Is an Arrow

By Mildred Cram

SAL always looked ten years younger than she was. When she was thirty she looked twenty. People couldn't believe she was Babe's mother. When Babe was twelve, she looked fifteen. Feature for feature, a carbon copy of Sal. The same grey eyes. The same pert nose. The same mouth. And both of them had crinkly blonde curls, short, like boys' wigs. And marvelous legs.

Mother and daughter? When they danced together, wearing shorts and pull-on sweaters, they looked like twins.

Sal had been in vaudeville—in the big time, too—for years. She had had a week at the Palace and a fortnight in London at the old Coliseum. Those were the days of rompers and hair ribbons. Sal did a kindergarten dance, eating an apple. Remember? Pretty as a picture—and cute? Say.

At thirty she was still cute. But vaudeville had piped its swan song and she was dancing in joints for a living. Wearing spangles and French heels. And singing little songs in a sweet, husky, off-key voice.

One night Ned Clancy saw her, and it was all over. He fell in love the way a man dreams. He went down and under.

Clancy was one of a dying race of men. He had the courage and the tenderness, the strength and the honesty that you seldom find any more. Women pray for his sort, and then fall for the weaklings and sissies. Perhaps there'd be more real men in the world if women had better taste and more patience.

Clancy took one look at Sal and his heart accepted her. He called the proprietor and made certain that she wasn't married.

"She's a widow" the proprietor whispered. "Her husband was one of the Four Flying Bellardis. Broke his neck in the net when Sal was seventeen. She's got a kid twelve years old."

"Okay," Clancy said. "I want to meet her. Fix it."

Clancy was on the force, then. Climbing. He never played politics to his own advantage, but he knew his power and used it. It's no secret where he is today. On top.

Sal liked him. He hadn't Bellardi's silky, co-ordinated physical menace. But he was the first man, since Bellardi, to stir the blood in her veins. She'd been cool and collected for twelve years, working to bring Babe up right, and to keep her own body and soul together. She had no time or desire for love.

But Clancy got her. He was tall and dark and had straight blue eyes and could carry her around in the palm of his hand. She warned him about Babe.

"I'm all wrapped up in the kid," she said. "Maybe I shouldn't get married."

"You love me, don't you?" Clancy said. Sal nodded. She couldn't speak. She loved Clancy terribly. Too much. The thought of not having him, of not hearing his voice, turned her cold as ice. She's sit for hours, feasting her eyes on him. But she loved Babe, too. A different love. Powerful. Absorbing. Dedicated.

"You deserve a little happiness of your own," Clancy said. "Babe'll get hers later. This is your chance at life. Here and now. With me."

"I guess you're right," Sal said. When he kissed her, she couldn't think. She could only feel. And know.

SHE married him one morning. And, that afternoon, Babe came home from school to find a strange man in the flat. A big, strange, handsome, quiet Irishman, who called himself Sal's husband.

Then the trouble began. It wasn't Babe's fault. It wasn't Clancy's—they both tried. But they just didn't click. Babe had inherited some of Bellardi's temper, his gusts of jealous rage and passionate atonement. A Neapolitan father is one thing. An Irish stepfather is another. All her life Babe had slept in Sal's room. Now she slept alone, down the hall, and Clancy closed the door upon Sal and himself. Babe was out. And for six months she cried herself to sleep every night. Sal's happiness only made it worse.

Sal was like Spring sunlight; she was like flowers. All day she sang around the flat. Doing this and doing that. Being domestic and married. Mrs. Clancy! Sal—who'd been a star! She never danced any more. Clancy paid for everything. Damn Clancy! Babe hated his clothes, hanging in Sal's closet. His pipe. His newspapers. The masculine weight and size and smell of him in the little rooms that—ever since Babe was born—had always been neat and cool and feminine. The portable phonograph was mute these days—because Clancy didn't like music! Babe had to do her homework in the kitchen, while Sal read out loud to Clancy—history and criminology and detective stories. Babe stuffed her fingers in her ears to drown out the sound of their laughter, their low happy, intimate murmurs. She grew thin, and coughed a lot, and couldn't study. Her report cards were terrible.

"I can't understand," Sal said. "Nothing but E's! Don't you want to be educated?"

"No," Babe said. "I want to be a dancer." Sal shook her head.

"You're too young," she said, "to know! Take my word for it, Babe, dancing's no cinch. I didn't realize how tired I was—how fed up—until Clancy came along. I'm never going to dance again."

But she did. Babe wasn't to blame. She wanted Sal to be happy. But she broke up Sal's marriage.

The day came when Sal realized that she had to make a choice between her man and her child. And Babe came first.

"I'm not the wife for you," she said. "I'm going to give you a divorce. You deserve a break, Clancy. You're a good man."

"Don't act like a fool," Clancy said. His eyes burned at her. "Send the kid to a nun's school. She's sick with jealousy, that's all. She'll get over it. Your life's your own. . . . But I can't make you happy unless you give all of yourself to me. I married you. Not Babe. She's another man's child. Don't you see, Sal, I can't bring myself to love her the way I'd love my own?"

"Yes Clancy, I see."

When Sal got her divorce she was thirty-three, and Babe was fifteen. They might have been sisters—except for the look in Sal's eyes. A strange, desolate look. You've seen it in the eyes of birds—something lonely and stark and apart.

CLANCY moved out of the flat and out of Sal's life. She wouldn't take a penny from him. With his going, something died in her. It was as if her heart died. And there it was, a dead thing, in her breast.

For Babe's sake, she pretended that it was all right. She sent for her old agent and told him she wanted a job. Quick. "I'm as good as ever," she said.

The agent glanced at Babe. Babe—all sparkling and pink-cheeked again, because she had Sal to herself.

"Why not a sister act?" the agent said. "Can the kid dance?"

Could the kid dance? They were the best in the business. The Heavenly Twins. Celestial blondes. Identical. Dazzling. A pair of gazelles who could do anything—tap, classical, ballet, pony, ballroom. . . . Anything! They moved as one being. Fluent, fluid and exact.

They danced, and they sang. Sal's husky contralto playing tricks behind Babe's cool, clear soprano. They were the first of those sweet sister singers of radio—close harmony—almost too close.

Babe was growing more beautiful with every dawn.

She could dance all night only to meet the grey, flat light of morning as fresh as the dew. But Sal's eyes would be blue-smudged with fatigue.

She looked into the mirror, and an arrow of doubt, tipped with poison, pierced her heart.

When she was all together, with a shampoo and an amberglint rinse and eyedrops and a slow, careful make-up, she was still a match for Babe. But Babe had it without trying—the real thing—youth.

Sal did some quick thinking and decided to break into radio.

Babe protested. "Let's stick to the floor shows," she begged. "Vaudeville's coming back, you'll see. All we need's a sophisticated act, and we'll land at El Morocco or the Ritz."

But something warned Sal that her cabaret days were over. The mike has no eyes. It wasn't easy, at first. Radio wasn't interested in twin dancers. There were times when it was a toss-up between paying the rent and buying dinner. Sal always paid the rent first and ate later. She loved the stuffy, dark little walk-up flat in the Forties. She fought to keep it. Home! The only place in the world where she felt safe.

She liked to putter around the kitchen, not giving a damn how she looked. She liked to think about Clancy—Clancy, who was a somebody now, a power on the force.

Once after a broadcast, he called Sal on the telephone. "I heard you sing last night. It sounded mighty sweet."

Sal's heart stopped.

"Clancy," she said. "Clancy!"

"How about it, Sal? Two years is a long time, at our age. Isn't Babe all set?"

"No, Clancy. Not yet."

"Can't she go it alone?"

"Not yet!"

"Listen, Sal. I love you. I want you to marry me again. But this time, Babe's out."

"Clancy—I couldn't leave her! She needs me."

"So do I," Clancy said.

Silence divided them. Sal wept. She could taste the bitter salt of her tears.

"Clancy," she whispered, at last, "when Babe's safe—when she's tops—then I'll come to you; I promise."

She waited for an answer, but Clancy hung up, without a word.

LATER, when Babe came in, fresh and pink from a walk in the snow, Sal told her.

"Clancy phoned," she said.

"Him?"

Babe took off her fur cap and shook out her curls.

"That dumb cluck? If he calls again, let me answer! I'll tell him a thing or two. Deserting you!"

Babe's panic-stricken moment, Sal thought she was going to faint. She put her face in her hands, and laughed.

"I hate him," Babe said. "I suppose now he's chief of police he thinks he can high-tail nobodies like us! Wait till we find a sponsor!"

As, before long, they did.

The Heavenly Twins, stars of the Tasty-Crunch Hour, with David Bronson's orchestra. Ted Young, baritone, Grace and Healey, comedians, and your announcer Felix Train.

Suddenly, out of the air, success. The microphone picked up Babe's eager-radiance, Sal's throaty wistfulness and the bright staccato patter of their dancing feet. "America listened in, and fell. It didn't matter any more that Sal was thirty-six, going on thirty-seven. A turn of the dial, and you got a pair of happy twins, baby-blue eyes. An illusion worth a cool thousand dollars a week to any sponsor."

"Let's move out of the flat," Babe said. "We're in the mopey, now. We can afford Park Avenue. And a little place in the country."

But Sal shook her head.

"No. I'm superstitious. We stay right here. Until the team breaks up."

"Breaks up?"

Babe stared at her mother.

"Are you crazy?"

"Time," Sal explained, "marches on!"

Babe laughed.

"If that's all. . . . Why, silly, you're growing younger every day!"

Sal didn't sleep much that night. She lay awake in the dark, wanting Clancy. Wanting him while she was still pretty.

But she couldn't leave Babe. Babe, alone, wouldn't have a chance. Sure, she was pretty and she could dance. But it took more than that these days. It was Sal who had the audience pull: a sense of timing, a flair for comedy, a sparkle and a throb in the throat, a lilt and a punch. Personality.

Alone, Babe wouldn't have lasted a week. Not on the air, where looks don't count.

"If she'd only fall in love," Sal thought,

She had money in the bank. But, God, how lonely she was! How she hated the everlasting battle with wrinkles and grey hair! She wanted to be a woman again. Let go and live and laugh. To hell with youth. She hated it. She hated the sight of herself—not a day over twenty-five—Clancy was fifty. The rotogravures revealed him grizzled and heavy, lined and serious. Her Clancy! If she could get into his arms again, and rest—and sigh—deep.

WHEN Babe came in just before dawn, the storm had passed. Sal, creamed and leech, slapped and anointed, buffed and leech, slept. Or seemed to sleep.

Babe tiptoed over and whispered: "Sal?"

Sal removed the eye pads and blinked up at her child.

"Sal, I had to tell you—he's simply marvelous!"

"Who's marvelous?"

"George. He was here—you remember? Tall and dark and handsome? He says I'm divine. He says I'll be a star. He says he's falling in love with me. . . ."

"That's swell," Sal said.

She didn't go to sleep again.

And when the camera caught her, the next day, she looked it. There were faint, revealing shadows about her mouth. A tracery of lines at the corners of her eyes. An elusive blurring of cheek and chin. . . . Babe faced the lens with contours that had neither flaw nor blemish. The camera ate her up, and then screamed for more.

Later, in the producer's projection room, a star was born.

But it wasn't Sal.

The producer sent for her.

"Tell her to come alone," was the message. "To my office. At once."

Sal's hands shook as she pulled on her jauntiest, craziest, youngest hat and pinned a fresh orchid to the lapel of her square-shouldered suit.

Babe was riding across the Hollywood hills with George.

Sal faced it. A premonition of what was to come possessed her.

"I'm sorry," the producer said. "We can't sign you together. As sisters, I mean."

"We're not sisters," Sal said. "I'm Babe's mother."

"I see."

The producer examined his well-manicured nails.

"That explains it," he said.

"Explains what?"

"The tests were—well, rather uneven. Your daughter's extraordinarily beautiful."

"I get you," Sal said. "But suppose you break up the team?"

"Frankly, we must. Surely, you wouldn't stand in the way of your daughter's career?"

"Me? No!"

"That's very decent of you. Very brave. We plan to groom her for stardom. A new name. Careful coaching. The right parts. We think we have something. In fact, we're enthusiastic about her possibilities."

The producer smiled brilliantly.

"Now, as to terms. . . ."

"I'm out?" Sal interrupted.

"Would you care to look at your tests?"

"No!"

She stood, hanging on to the back of her chair to steady herself. "This is the end of the sister act," she said.

"If your daughter consents—and, believe me, she'd be very foolish if she didn't consent. She has her own life to live. Her own career to consider. I'm terribly sorry, of course."

"I'm not," Sal said. "Oh, Lord, I'm not! I'm the happiest woman in the world!"

When Sal got back to the hotel, Babe was there, soaking in a tub full of scented soap bubbles.

"Dry off," Sal said, "and come out. I've got something to tell you."

Babe appeared, wrapped in pale blue toweling, her hair in tight, wet ringlets.

"He's even more wonderful than I thought," she said.

"Who?"

"George. He rides like a Cossack. And he's terribly sweet and masterful."

Sal lit a cigarette.

"Don't tell me you're in love, Babe."

"I don't think so. But even if I was, darling, it wouldn't make any difference. I'll never leave you."

"You won't have to," Sal said. "I'm leaving you, instead."

SHE put her arm around her child, pressing her cheek against Babe's, holding her close.

"Listen, sweet. The studio's agreed to sign you for five years. At so much a week it would make a maharajah sick with envy. You're all set—and I'm flying back to New York tonight, to marry Clancy."

"Clancy!"

Babe tore herself away, hurt and indignant.

"You mean you're going to leave me? For him? Oh, you can't! You can't!"

"The studio doesn't want me," Sal said. "Besides—"

"She had to go down. She felt faint and queer."

"I love Clancy. I always have. And now I'm tired. I want to quit and settle down—live a little—before it's too late."

Babe began, passionately, to cry.

"Just when I'm beginning to be happy—you do this!"

"Maybe you think I won't miss you," Sal said. "My baby. . . . Maybe you think leaving you doesn't tear my heart wide open."

Babe went down on her knees and buried her head in Sal's lap.

"I didn't know. You didn't tell me! Why. . . ."

Sal stroked the tight ringlets. "Clancy's my man, that's all."

"More than Daddy?"

"Everything's more," Sal said, "at my age."

"Oh, Sal," Babe sobbed, "don't leave me! I'll give Hollywood up. I'll give George up."

"You'll give nothing up," Sal said. "You're going to be a great star. A year from now you'll be backing Garbo off the screen. The studio's nuts about you. Raving."

"Really?"

Babe lifted her head, wiping her eyes on a corner of the blue toweling.

"What did they say?"

"They said you could write your own ticket—the sky's the limit."

Sal put her hands on Babe's shoulders. "You're safe, now! I want you to promise me to keep clean—the way I've taught you—and to stay happy, always. Promise me, Babe."

Suddenly Babe caught Sal close. "You've been so good to me, Sal!"

They clung together, crying.

"Now you get into the tub," Sal said, "and finish your soak—while I pack."

"You're not going now?"

"Tonight. You and George can see me off."

Babe clutched the toweling and ran back to the scented suds.

Sal closed the bathroom door, and put in a call to Washington.

"Mr. Edward Clancy—yes, please, I'll hold the line."

While she waited, she listened to the loud, triumphant pounding of her own heart. Her hands shook. If this was happiness, it was close to pain. She'd waited so many years! And here it was, shining and glorious—a light that hurt. She closed her eyes and prayed: "God let Clancy be there! Let him answer now. . . ."

"Here's your party, Madam."

"Thanks."

And Clancy's voice, real as life: "Hello!"

SAL caught her breath. "At long last—" she began. And laughed.

"Clancy? It's me—Sal!"

"Sal?" A fraction of a pause. "Where are you?"

"I'm in Hollywood, California. And listen, darling. I've got good news. An hour ago, I signed Babe to pictures. I'm free. I'm coming—I'll marry you the day after tomorrow. If you still want me."

She couldn't understand. She was crying again. Tears that splashed on the table—big, wet, scalding tears that partially blinded her. "Clancy," she said. "Clancy—do you hear me?"

"I hear you, Sal."

His voice sounded far off and strange.

"I wish I didn't," he said. "I wish this hadn't happened. I'm married, Sal. I thought you knew—it was in the papers."

"No," Sal said. She licked her lips. Suddenly her hands were steady. Her heart stopped pounding. She was cold and quiet. I didn't know, Clancy. I'm glad. Glad, for your sake. Very glad for you."

She hung up, carefully. Her head went down on her arms. For a moment a sort of dizziness stole over her.

"Sal!" Babe, from the bathroom: "Who was that?"

"No one," Sal said. She lifted her head. "I was just phoning downstairs for the bill. She laughed, for Babe to hear: "Life begins," she said, "at forty."

President of Railway Who Preferred Cab

PRESIDENT S. J. Hungerford, of the Canadian National Railways, in London on airways business, was caught the other day looking longingly at a big streamlined engine, hissing under a full pressure of steam in King's Cross Station, just before it hauled out the Flying Scot.

He also looked enviously at the engineer—engine-driver we call him over here. "Lucky man," he said.

"For fifty years I have wanted to drive an engine like that," he told the reporter of a Sunday newspaper. "But they side-tracked me—made me chief of the line instead."

"I'd as soon drive an engine," he continued, "as be responsible for 3,000 of them."

He prophesied that before very long the Londoner would be able to travel to Vancouver by air in forty hours.

"The air interests me," he said. "You see, next to an engine-driver I wanted to be an airman, and do you know what they made me? President of the Canadian Air Lines." And there was just a touch of bitterness, a sort of wild regret, a "what had been could never be," in his tone.

Gifts for Princesses

PRINCE Olaf of Norway, as was duly expected of him, has returned from his English yachting trip laden with gifts for his family. For the two little princesses (Ragnhild, 7, and Astrid, 5), the souvenirs chosen were English books. The little girls have to thank their grandmother, Queen Maud, for the very fair knowledge of English they have already; now they are learning to read English simultaneously with Norwegian. Princess Ragnhild, the elder daughter of Prince Olaf, is exceptionally bright for her age. Princess Astrid is very fond of cats, and her father has brought her several volumes with Louis Wain's illustrations. He has also brought home some song books and volumes of nursery tales.

India's Trade Policy

With Huge Market to Offer She Is Negotiating With United Kingdom and Later With Canada

By G. E. Powell

THE Indian Government, traditionally committed to a most-favored-nation trade policy, has launched upon a series of negotiations with representatives of countries anxious to share in the market supplying India's 350 millions.

As a first step the Government has made a move towards conclusion of an agreement with the United Kingdom, India's largest customer. Negotiations with other important trading countries, including Canada, will follow.

India's official representatives are now in London, supported by a group of merchant advisers. It is generally believed they will seek to effect an agreement based on the demand heard at Delhi last year—a pact leaving scope for deals with other countries, subject to India's policy of discriminating protection for her industries.

A most-favored-nation trade policy, it is argued, is most suitable to a great agricultural country such as India. With a large surplus of produce for export, she must sell abroad to meet her commitments as a borrower of capital for the development of her economic resources.

An exception has been made in the past for British and other empire imports, because the export market of which they are the counterpart, was most important.

The United Kingdom alone in 1936-37 took $45,750,000 worth of Indian exports out of a total for the British Empire of $65,250,000 and for all overseas countries of $147,000,000. The corresponding import figures were $36,000,000, $46,500,000 and $93,750,000.

If the Dominions and Colonies are counted in, the importance to India of the British markets is even greater. In the year April, 1936, to March, 1937, Canada shipped $540,000 worth of goods into India and took from India goods worth more than $1,500,000. This figure does not include the amounts earned by Canadian insurance companies in India.

Canada-India Trade

CANADA'S present exports to India are largely manufactures, like motor cars and trucks, rubber tires and tubes, electrical apparatus and foodstuffs.

India is certainly not self-sufficient in these manufactures. She would like to see her fishing industry better developed, but this is unlikely to affect specialized Canadian exports.

CANADIAN THEATRICAL GROUP TO PLAY OVERSEAS

Bound overseas to demonstrate French Canadian theatrical talent in Europe, the Barry-Duquesne Company, under the leadership of Joseph Cardinal, Montreal impresario, is pictured on the Empress of Britain in which they sailed from Quebec. Left to right they are: Jules Jacob, Roger Filiatrault, Albert Trotter, Mlle. Marthe Thierry, Oscar O'Brien, leader of the Alouette Quartette which is accompanying the players; Arthur Duquesne, Fred Barry, Emile Lamarre, Joseph Cardinal, Mimi d'Este, Henri Duiglen, author of the play "La Canadienne," which the company is staging and Mde. Belle Ouellette.

On motor cars and trucks the United Kingdom at present has a 7½ per cent advantage in customs duty. On other important Canadian products the margin of preference is 10 per cent.

India exports to Canada mainly tea, jute and rice (of which the Dominion increased her purchases considerably in 1936-37) but also peanuts, raw wool, shellac, raw cotton, pepper and various oils.

India would like Canada to take more of her raw cotton, sugar, jute, vegetable oils and oilseeds, tea, hides and skins, and coffee, all important items on the Canadian import list in 1935.

In any negotiations India might also be expected to point to the change in her balance of trade with Canada during the first three months of this year.

Imports by Canada

WHEREAS in recent years Canada's imports from India were considerably in excess of the value of India's imports from Canada, the trade between the two countries in these three months almost balanced. Canada imported $292,500 worth of Indian goods against $240,000 exported to this country—nearly three times as much as in the corresponding quarter of the previous year.

India in these three months bought more Canadian motor cars than in the corresponding period of 1936 ($68,000 against $22,500) and omnibuses, lorries, etc. ($75,000 against $37,500).

Whether this approach to equality in the exchange of Indian and Canadian goods is to be permanent it is too early to say. That it is a sign of India's economic recovery seems clear as India is more prosperous than it has been for seven years.

The depression severely hit India with its vast majority of people dependent on agriculture. The price of produce grown on the land has risen, more industries are being started—the growth of sugar manufacturing has been phenomenal. Campaigns to make agricultural methods more efficient and so add to the Indian peasant's sources of income are in progress all over the country. The peasant has noticeably more to spend as the depression atmosphere is passing.

India was slower in recovering economically than many countries, but she now is enjoying better times and great prosperity appears to lie ahead.

Dunning's Statement

BRITISH-Indian newspapers did not fail to notice the remarks reported to have been made by Charles Dunning, Canadian Minister of Finance, in the House of Commons early this year. Canada's imports from this country were last year three times the value of this country's imports from Canada, and whereas Indian goods have a customs preference in the Canadian market, this country gives the Dominions' imports no corresponding concession.

Mr. Dunning reminded the House that the Canadian Government had the power to withdraw preferences that were not reciprocated.

This statement of facts is not denied here. The Government of India, which has control of British India's customs tariff, has two sets of duties: preferential, applicable to many products from the United Kingdom, the Dominions and Colonies. The other standard is imposed on imports from other countries.

The present Minister of Finance, Sir James Grigg, is believed to hold the opinion that India's customs duties need revision, some being too high. But relief to the importer and his clients has been slow in coming, because, five-twelfths of the Government of India's revenue is derived from customs duties, and while the economic depression was at its worst, the Government was presumably unwilling to weaken so valuable a support of its revenue system, especially as there was for several years a deficit on the railways and each increase in income tax rates was bitterly opposed in the Legislative Assembly.

The pace of economic recovery in India is now quickening. Railway and income tax receipts show a welcome increase, the burden on income tax payers has been lightened and the importer and his Indian correspondents are on stronger ground in asking for relief. Thus the import duty on newsprint was, in response to the newspapers' request, reduced.

At the same time it would be right to pitch hopes too high, for, as the Government of India has pointed out, the rise in prices, a symptom of world and Indian economic recovery, has necessitated the Government paying more for what it brings in itself.

Negotiations With Canada

TO turn from the height of the Indian customs tariff as a whole to Indo-Canadian trade in particular, it is thought unlikely the Government of India will consider negotiations until the present discussions between the Indian and the United Kingdom trade delegations in London have come to a definite conclusion.

These were rendered necessary by the Legislative Assembly's voting, last year, in favor of terminating the trade agreement between the United Kingdom and India, negotiated at Ottawa in 1932. This agreement has been attacked by large sections of Indian opinion, notably in the Central Legislative Assembly by the Congress and the Independent Party led by M. A. Jinnah, president of the All-India Moslem League.

Members of these parties argued that at Ottawa the Indian delegation did not take up a strong enough stand against British claims, a much better bargain could have been driven with Great Britain, the actual agreement had led to a diversion of India's export trade from other countries into the British market, and that other countries had, by penalizing Indian shipments to their ports, retaliated against the preferences accorded to the British importer in India.

The Government, they said, should explore the possibility of negotiating bilateral trade treaties with other countries. Already the Government has announced arrangements with South Africa pending the conclusion of a formal treaty, there are trade talks in progress with Siam, Muscat and the Dutch East Indies, others with Ceylon are in prospect, and a new trade agreement has been concluded with Japan.

Favor Trade Treaties

THUS Indian politicians are definitely in favor of trade treaties with other countries. As regards Canada, the following passage appears in a pamphlet issued this year by Nalini Ranjan Sarkar, who is Minister of Finance of Bengal:

"There is still some scope for an extension of India's trade with the Dominions on the basis of reciprocity. Canada's import of non-Empire tea is not negligible while she imports rice to some extent from outside the Empire. For these products, to some extent possibly also for manufactured jute, Canada might offer India some facilities. In return she could be granted either the same preference as is enjoyed by the United Kingdom or some intermediate preference for her motor cars."

Earlier, Mr. Sarkar admits that "the possibilities of a large exchange of commodities between India and the Dominions are limited by the fact that they are, like India, large exporters of agricultural goods. In the case of Canada the proximity to the United States is another important factor."

Between Men--and Meals

MARTINUS L. Hansen, dining car steward; Angelo Rita, dining car chef.

The combination is like ham and eggs. Rita is a voluble Italian whose hands move rapidly when he talks. Hansen is a tall, dignified Swede with a moustache that would be the envy of a sergeant-major of the Guards.

Rita is the master cook, with a palate that readily distinguishes the slightest variation of flavor. Hansen knows more than a little about cooking, too, but is really a master caterer with a wide background of experience in railways and hotels in Russia, Germany, Sweden, England and Canada.

Together the oddly-assorted pair preside over one of the Canadian Pacific's new air-conditioned dining cars operating between Vancouver and Calgary. They make their homes—when they are in town, in Vancouver, and though they have lived in many parts of the world, Vancouver is their first choice.

World-Wide Travelers

THEY are, together, a fine illustration of the nomadic life of the true caterer—the maître d'hôtel, the chef, the steward. In the strange little world in which the master chefs move with their friends, the head waiters and stewards, race, nationality, country of origin, have no place. Nor has religion, or politics.

From the ends of the earth they come, and to the ends of the earth, as the spirit moves them, they go. They are as international as artists, actors or musicians. All they need is their "books"—the dog-eared, worn little documents which certify as to their completed apprenticeships, and jobs they have held, and a pocketful of passports.

One day in Berlin, the next in St. Petersburg, as it was in bygone days. One year in London, the next in New York. This year in Vancouver, next year, perhaps, in Hongkong or Singapore.

"Learn to cook and see the world" may well be the slogan of the cook and the caterer.

Take, for example, Martinus L. Hansen and Angelo Rita.

Hansen took to railroading in his native Sweden in 1890, to serve an apprenticeship in catering. Then he went to St. Petersburg in Russia, to the Victoria Hotel, in a very humble part, to learn more of that fascinating and painstaking business. From Russia he went to Berlin, to the stately Hotel Bristol. He was coming along well now. Then to the Metropolitan Hotel in old London, where he sat at the feet of the master caterer, Ritch, founder of the famous Ritz-Carlton Hotels. And finally to the Savoy, in London, as assistant to the managing director.

But why be a caterer and not travel? Hansen reasoned.

So by 1909 he is in Canada as inspector at Winnipeg—for the Canadian Pacific Railway's dining cars. Another nine years of the nomadic dining car life and he is in Vancouver as assistant manager of Hotel Vancouver.

Comin' Through Rockies

A NICE berth, you say? Perhaps, but Hansen has not forgotten the old days in Sweden aboard the Landskrona and Helsingfors Railway. The life of the dining car steward seems more fun, especially with that view of the Kicking Horse Pass, the climb through the Spiral Tunnels, the rugged grandeur of Albert Canyon, the sway of the car and the click of the wheels on the rail joints. It's fun meeting the public, telling the tourists all about the route.

"How long is the Connaught Tunnel?" they say. "Five miles," he replies, "and right through solid granite. It was a wonderful engineering feat."

So he is back on the rails again, this time to stay, and by now he has found his partner, Angelo Rita, the voluble little cook whose sense of palate is sheer wizardry.

Smoothly, efficiently operates the car. Passengers began to write letters of commendation to railway officials. Soon the Hansen-Rita combination is getting talked less kitchen to see him at work. Flattered, as even a great chef can be, Angelo proudly demonstrates his skill, the trade he so completely learned as a youngster in Naples, where he completed his apprenticeship ship at the age of seventeen.

The convention over, the president of the Chamber writes a fine letter of appreciation. Into scrapbooks already bulging with similar documents from the great, the near-great, the famous and the distinguished, Hansen and Rita, gratified, stow their copies of these words of praise. They enjoyed the trip as much as the Chamber delegates. Work well done is always satisfying to the artist: it is his chief reward.

In time off, waiting for their next call to the road, Chef Rita amuses himself with visits to his many friends in the catering business in Vancouver. He calls at Hotel

Vancouver for a chat with Albert Fuoco, its smiling Italian-born maître d'hôtel, or, should his ship be in port, drops down to the Empress of Asia at Pier B for a yarn with Pietro Colombo, the Asia's remarkable chef, and a lovable character.

A home man, Martinus Hansen has one chief hobby—travel. The rush of the Summer season behind him, off he packs with Mrs. Hansen for a ramble through the United States, to Sweden and Europe, or perhaps to Honolulu. Nine months out of a year on a dining car is not enough travel for this globe-trotter; he must see the world in the other three months. And he does.

Besides, somewhere abroad or in New York, he may come on a recipe, a trick of service or an undiscovered salad. Caterers and cooks never stop traveling—or learning.

Entire Ship's Crew Slain By Hostile Coast Indians

By GEORGE BONAVIA

A STORY hinting at murder of the Seabird's crew by hostile Indians on the coast of Vancouver Island appeared in The Vancouver News in June, 1887. Information came from a man named McNeerahaney, who claimed he heard the story from an Indian.

On June 26, J. A. Moore, baggage master aboard Ss. Yosemite, told government officials at Victoria that the Seabird sailed from Port Townsend for Albert Bay, Alaska, in May, 1886. Moore heard from Indians that Capt. Wells, Henry Moore, pilot; Henry Bolt, seaman, and another sailor had all been murdered near Kinglet's Inlet by savages.

Although Capt. William Moore, son of the missing pilot aboard the Seabird, made four voyages to Alaska, he failed to find any trace of the missing vessel and her crew.

Later it was definitely established that the Seabird called at McNeerahaney's general store, near Cape Mudge, on June 9, 1886. No white man saw the vessel's crew again.

Remains of the Seabird were located in Blenkinsop Bay by a search party in July. Constable John Flewin discovered in a slough quantities of stone ballast, nails, bolts, planking from the Seabird and several piles of iron fittings, partially covered over by tree branches. Nearby he came across a trunk containing three pairs of socks, tobacco, tinware and a white shirt with only one sleeve. He also found a partially buried ship's stove and cooking utensils.

Suspect Arrested

THROUGH information supplied police, an Indian named Quacloskum was arrested soon after the discovery of the Seabird's remains. A brother native claimed Quacloskum told him he killed the Seabird's crew and carried off a sum of money and several cases of whisky. He said he saw the savage breaking up the vessel in Blenkinsop Bay.

Before Magistrate Edwin Johnson at Victoria on August 25, 1887, Quacloskum was formally charged with murder of the ship's crew. Mrs. Agnes Simpson was interpreter.

Constable Flewin told of arresting Quacloskum at Valdez Island during a search conducted by Ss. Skidegate. Indians proved hostile, and the constable and his party had to draw their guns before making the arrest and securing several witnesses.

Narcumalam, a witness, told the court about July, 1886, he saw Klahqunkan and another Indian he did not recognize chopping up a sloop near Cape Mudge. He was offered $50 in bills to say nothing. Then they told him they killed three white men, one of them one-armed. He also said he was informed they knew where the white men's skulls were hidden.

Klahqunkan was arrested and drawn into the case. Mrs. Henry Moore in court recognized a letter found by police at the scene of the alleged massacre. It had been written by her husband, pilot of the Seabird, at Coal Harbor on July 3, 1886.

Indian Wanted

AS the trial dragged on, new interest was added when H. E. Langis, M.P., on September 2, received a letter stating one of the Indians wanted for the murder was at McRae and Campbell's camp on Cordero Channel.

Macmoose, the Indian referred to in the letter, was tried on a murder charge here on September 23. Several Indian witnesses claimed Macmoose and Quacloskum committed the murder. Nariacarmarloo swore Quacloskum told him he murdered the whites, broke up the ship and removed money and whisky aboard. Kwiparloapar, an Indian woman, corroborated the testimony and asserted she was offered a dress not to tell what she knew about the crime.

The court was faced with a confused mass of evidence from native witnesses, many of whom were suspected to be deliberately lying. Unfortunately the writer was unable to find any record of convictions in the case.

This Week's Best Books

By LIBRARY SERVICE

A NUMBER of new books of travel and biography have recently been added to the Public Library. In this week's list have been included a few representative titles. Readers interested in travel in foreign countries will enjoy "Land of Tomorrow," by R. W. Thompson, a lively account of a visit to South America; "Legacy of India," by G. T. Garratt; "Barbados," by Raymond Savage; "Atlas of Empire," by Horrabin, and "Puppets Through Lancashire," by Walter Wilkinson. Those interested in biography will enjoy the following titles, which include two royal biographies, giving historical as well as biographical data, a biography of the New York theatre, and others of interest.

"Land of Tomorrow," by R. W. Thompson. A good account of a visit to South America which covers much ground and gives a convincing interpretation of the life there. The author, a British writer, and his wife, faced with financial difficulties at home, decided to gamble everything on a trip to other lands to find material and inspiration for work. South America was chosen as their destination, and this book is the tale of their trip, the voyage over on a tramp steamer, their visits in Argentina, Paraguay and Bolivia, their meeting with people of various types. The writer's account of the war in the Gran Chaco concludes his book—which is a most attractive and readable personal record of mixed adventure of two very much alive young people.

"Atlas of Empire." This new book in Horrabin's atlas series contains seventy simply drawn maps showing the colonial possessions of the various World Powers. Each map is faced with a page of comments giving factual information on history, economic and political questions. The book makes a worthy basic primer for anyone who wants to talk about international affairs or who is willing to think about them.

"Puppets Through Lancashire," by Walter Wilkinson. For some years the author has been traveling through the English countryside, during the Summer months, with a small puppet show outfit. His most recent tour was in Lancashire, with an excursion into Westmoreland. The trip began, continued and ended in rain, and as he camped by night, the trip was not an overwhelming success, financially or otherwise. This book of the author's experiences and reflections en route is very human and charming, and contains a fine collection of amusing experiences of his journeys on foot, as well as giving a good description of depression conditions in Lancashire.

"Royal George," by Colwyn Edward Vulliamy. "A study of King George III, his experiment in monarchy, his decline and retirement; with a view of society, politics and historic events during his reign" (sub-title). The book is a carefully considered study of a monarch and a period, based upon extensive research. The involvement history of the time is set before us with clarity; there are some entertaining descriptions of the King's social and domestic life, and many striking portraits of men who were outstandingly significant in their day and country. Mr. Vulliamy has given us an excellently written, interesting and informative book.

"Eleanor of Aquitaine," by Melrich V. Rosenberg. A full length biography of Eleanor of Aquitaine, whose long and eventful life stretched from 1122 to 1204. She was married at fifteen to Louis VII of France and after several years divorced him to marry Henry II of England. Two of her sons became Kings of England, including her favorite, Richard the Lion-Hearted. She is considered the Queen of the Troubadours and of the famous medieval courts of love. Mr. Rosenberg has recreated Eleanor as a real and vital person. The costumes, customs and ethics of the period are entertainingly presented.

"Daniel Frohman Presents," by Daniel Frohman. Refinements of a noted New York producer, given over largely to anecdotes of the famous actors, actresses, playwrights and others whom the author has known during his long career in the theatrical world. This book is an extremely genial, shirt-sleeve sort of narrative, glittering with the white light of Broadway, which carries one along with great breeziness and a fine flow of entertainment.

"This Shining Woman," by George R. Preedy. The biography of Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin, who was the author of "A Vindication of the Rights of Women" and the mother of Shelley's second wife. It is called a story of her life, "not her opinions or time." As such, it is an orderly and substantial summary of known facts plus a certain amount of conjecture. The author has drawn a sympathetic and convincing portrait.

"Legacy of India," by Geoffrey T. Garratt. Mother India, her contribution to our present day and what she has given to the world in the past, is deftly handled by a group of eminent writers, both English and Indian, in this most recent and among the best books of "The Legacy Series." The book deals adequately, though not exhaustively, with all the important aspects of India's civilization. Literature, early and present, art and archaeology, philosophy, the caste system, Buddhism and Hinduism, Moslem architecture, cultural influences of Islam; music, science, vernacular literatures and Indo-British civilization are dealt with. "Legacy of India" is a scholar's book which has a large degree of public interest as well.

"Barbados," by Raymond Savage. A pleasant, informative, yet brief travel book on Barbados, which combines a rambling description of the island and some historical facts, with information for tourists on what to see, and do, and where to stay. The book is agreeable in its content, practical in its facts, and it tells the newcomer exactly what he wishes to know.

Pen and Pencil Landscape

By Robert Connell

THE Arts and Crafts Society has just been holding its annual exhibition in the city. The significance of the society and of the work displayed under its auspices is appreciated by many people, as the annual attendance shows, but too many miss it entirely. The handicrafts have a special importance of their own, because they represent a healthy protest against the standardization of the machine age. They are a little island of ancient creative industry in the midst of a sea of engineer goods. Old crafts, the potter with his wheel and clay, the spinner and weaver with spindle and loom, the woodcarver, the metal-worker, the book-binder, and so on, show a vitality that is amazing considering the odds against them. As displayed in our midst, they are only a fragment of the larger body which flourishes still in places where the ancient love of the soil and of past customs has so far successfully resisted the factory's advance. The Irish peasant, the Scottish crofter, the Quebec habitant, the Coast Indian, are familiar among those groups that continue to produce by hand articles of artistic worth and lasting utility.

The handicraft is more than a mere "supply and demand" commodity: it is an expression of the genius of a people, of traditions and customs rooted in the past, of the natural desire to imprint the soul on concrete things and link together art and utility. I have mentioned groups within Canada and the British Isles, but there are vastly larger numbers of the human race who still follow the old way and whose handicrafts meet the needs of the home and are sought after by collectors of the beautiful in color and form. We cannot set back the mechanical advance which still persists, but we can prepare the way for the increased leisure that will probably come, and we can help to maintain and develop standards of beauty and durability that the world at large may appreciate more than it does today.

In the Art Section

IN what is called the Art Section of the exhibition, the part devoted to the fine arts as distinguished from the handicrafts, paintings occupy the pre-eminent place, executed in oils, crayons, watercolors, and black and white. The watercolor section is much the largest, and of the pictures therein the majority are devoted to landscape, with a few purely marine scenes or seascapes. While the artists have not confined themselves to our Island or even our Province, most of them have found their material here. Mountains, fir forests, lakes, placid bays, rocky shores, maples, oaks, arbutuses—all figure more or less transformed by the artist's degree of insight. There is, I think, room, however, for more use in foregrounds of some of our native alien plants. Thus, for example, the handsome cow-parsnip, Heracleum lanatum, lends itself admirably to this purpose, with its great incised leaves and broad umbels of snowy flowers, a characteristic plant of thickets in the fields and along roadsides, easy to find, since it grows freely within the city and can be found along Oak Bay Avenue. The clay cliffs of Cordova Bay in Spring often are brightened by the pale mauve flowers of the native colts-foot, and later its large, highly decorative leaves are well worth an artist's attention. What can be finer in its place than the glossy dark green mat of the kinnikinnick, as it spills down over a rocky bank or spreads over the ground beneath a clump of pines? Flowering shrubs like ocean-spray, hardhack, goat's-beard, mock-orange and flowering currant, among others, all are highly suitable for giving character as well as force to the foreground.

In Former Years

UNFORTUNATELY the country immediately around Victoria no longer provides the artist with the animals which at least in certain landscapes give an added interest, as it did thirty years ago, when the Uplands oak groves, the slaughter-house pastures at Mount Tolmie, and the meadows east of Quadra Street, extending up to St. Barnabas' Church and along the valley south of Hillside Avenue, were never without their grazing cattle and sheep, to say nothing of the farms about Mount Tolmie. The Tod farm at Cedar Hill was a charming sight, with its sheep feeding beneath the scattered oaks. Yet twice within recent years I have seen oxen ploughing within three or four miles of the City Hall. So all hope is not lost.

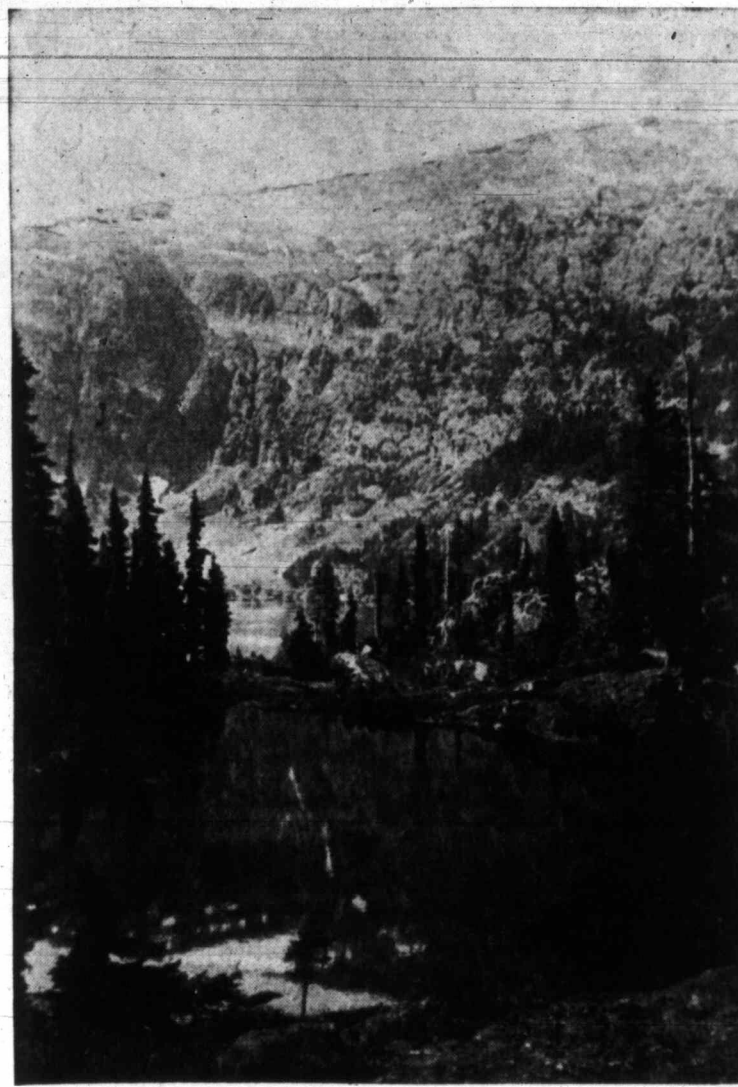

Material for the marine painter is scarcely as picturesque as it was, for the introduction of the gas engine has put the sail in a secondary place, and the picturesque of the old-fashioned fishing boats is gone. No longer do you see their red-tan sails at the wharf where the east end of the Johnson Street Bridge now rests. Still, sails are used at times, and lend a note of color and vivacity to the scene. But about the waterfront there are generally things of use to the artist on the watch. Among my sketches is one of the last day of the Victoria sealing fleet, the wharves of Point Ellice snowy white with the canvas spread out for the inspection of the buyers at that tragic auction. Here we approach the historical, and it is a matter of deep interest that the landscape artists of Victoria have enshrined many features of the past while it was still possible. Old buildings do not as a rule linger on here as in the Old World, and it is largely the instinct of the artist that gives us a permanent record of them. A watercolor of Miss Crease's shows in the foreground a piece of old masonry. It is the last surviving bit of the first quarantine station which was established at Albert Head.

The Historical Side

THIS historical side of the artist's work is only one mode of expressing the truth that in all representations of Nature the presence of human life, actual or implied, is essential. Landscape painting is more than pretty color-schemes or striking color-experiments; it is more than the most pleasantly accurate record of botanical, geological, meteorological or topographical facts, separately or united. Thus a forest without some sign of human occupancy is in the proper English sense of the word a wilderness: so Cowper uses it:

"O for a lodge in some vast wilderness,
Some boundless contiguity of shade."

That sign may be only a cow-path or a woodsman's axe; but it speaks of man. "The Lord God planted a garden eastward, in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed . . . to dress it and to keep it." This "essential connection of the power of landscape with human emotion," as Ruskin calls it, is also evident in literature. Wordsworth, who has given Nature a unique place in poetry, is never heedless of the "still, sad music of humanity." In "The Excursion" there occurs in Book II a remarkable picture of a scene among the mountains, an "unimaginable sight" when, with the withdrawal of the vapor, he sees

TOPPED WITH ICE AND SNOW ALL THE YEAR ROUND

A striking view of Mount Albert Edward in the Forbidden Plateau, and one of the many towering mountains in the playground area. The mountain is almost nude of vegetation, except for Alpine plants and hardy pines. The lake at the base of the mountain is crystal clear. The Forbidden Plateau is not far from Victoria, the Capital City of British Columbia, and is fast becoming a popular tourist playground.

"Clouds, mists, streams, watery rocks, and emerald turf,
Clouds of all tincture, rocks and sapphire sky,
Confused, commingled, mutually inflamed,
Molten together, and composing thus,

"Each lost in each, that marvelous array
Of temple, palace, citadel, and huge
Fantastic pomp of structure without name,
In fleecy folds voluminous, enwrapped."

But amid all this wealth of color and form, and fancied resemblance to human things, he adds:

"This little vale, a dwelling-place of man,
Lay low beneath my feet; 'twas visible—
I saw not, but I felt that it was there."

In Poet's Setting

LANDSCAPE in the poets generally is the setting and background of human life, its common tasks and daily round, its loves and hatreds, its fears and struggles, its failures and aspirations. In the novelist it plays the same part. Scott's contribution to his country's scenic fame is due to the manner in which his landscapes, from the Trossachs to Liddesdale and from the Orkneys to Galloway, have been peoples by him with those whom his wizardry created.

Scott's landscapes in prose and verse are well known, but I think scarcely enough attention has been given to Dickens as a portrayer of the English scene. Attention has been so much concentrated on his characters and their town associations that the settings of Nature in which from time to time they appear have been overlooked. Sometimes the very whimsicality of Dickens blinds us to his excellence, as when he writes: "Up came the sun, streaming all over London, and in its glorious impartially even condescending to make prismatic sparkles in the whiskers of Mr. Alfred Lammle as he sat at breakfast." Or in an earlier chapter of the "same book," "Our Mutual Friend," where we find a picture of London streets in "nipping Spring with an easterly wind." But turn to chapter VI of the Fourth Book and read this evening scene, with its human figures, as always in Dickens: "The Paper Mill had stopped work for the night, and the paths and roads in its neighborhood were sprinkled with clusters of people going home from their day's labor in it. There were men, women, and children in the groups, and there was no want of lively color to flutter in the gentle evening wind. The mingling of various voices and the sound of laughter made a cheerful impression upon the ear, analogous to that of the fluttering colors upon the eye. Into the sheet of water reflecting the flushed sky in the foreground of the living picture, a knot of urchins were casting stones and watching the expansion of the rippling circles. So, in the rosy evening, one might watch the ever-widening beauty of the landscape—beyond the newly-released workers wending home—beyond the silver river—beyond the deep green fields of corn, so prospering that the loiterers in their narrow threads of pathways seemed to float immersed breast-high—beyond the hedgerows and the clumps of trees—beyond the windmills on the ridge—away to where the sky appeared to meet the earth, as if there were no immensity of space between mankind and heaven."

Dickens' Landscapes

SOME of Dickens' best landscapes are in "Martin Chuzzlewit." The second chapter has a charming description of an Autumn day in a "little Wiltshire village," when the declining sun breaks through the mist and of the wind that rises in the evening and finally gets out to sea, "where it met with other winds similarly disposed, and made a night of it." It is too long to quote in full, but I must give one paragraph: "The fallen leaves, with which the ground was strewn, gave forth a pleasant fragrance, and subduing all harsh sounds of distant feet and wheels, created a repose in gentle unison with the light scattering of seed hither and thither by the distant husbandman, and with the noiseless passage of the plough as it turned up the rich brown earth and wrought a graceful pattern in the stubbled fields. On the motionless branches of some trees, Autumn berries hung like clusters of coral beads, as in those fabled orchards where the fruits were jewels; others, stripped of all the garniture, stood, each the centre of its little heap of bright red leaves, watching their slow decay; others again, still wearing theirs, had them all crunched and crackled up, as though they had been burnt; about the stems of some were piled in ruddy mounds the apples they had borne that year; while others (hardy evergreen this class) showed somewhat stern and gloomy in their vigor, as charged by Nature with the admonition that it is not to her most sensitive and joyous favorites she grants the longest term of life. Still athwart their darkened boughs, the sunbeams struck out paths of deeper gold; and the red light, mantling in among their swarthy branches, used them as foils to set its brightness off and aid the lustre of the dying day."

Nature Described

AGAIN, in the fifth chapter, where Tom Pinch starts off for the new pupil, we have that delightful paragraph beginning: "What better time for driving, riding, walking, moving through the air by any means, than a fresh, frosty morning, when hope runs cheerily through the veins with the break blood, and tingles in the frame from head to foot!" Or look up that account of the coach-and-four journey that took Tom Pinch away: is there anywhere a passage so full, not only of the spirit of the coaching days but of the old England of those days. Always the same extraordinary observation of the landscape revealed, as in this: "Yoho, past streams, in which the cattle cool their feet, and where the rushes grow; past paddock-fences, farms, and rick-yards; past last year's stacks, cut, slice by slice, away, and showing in the waning light like ruined gables, old and brown."

Then there is one striking passage in that terrible chapter where we see the "close, thick, shadowy wood" into which Tigg Montague took his last and lonely walk. "The last rays of the sun were shining in, aslant, making a path of golden light along the stems and branches in its range. . . . It was so very quiet that the soft and stealthy moss about the trunks of some old trees seemed to have grown out of the silence and to be its proper offering. . . . Vistas of silence everywhere into the heart and innermost recesses of the wood; beginning with the likeness of an aisle, a cloister, or a ruin open to the sky; then tangling off into a deep green rustling mystery, through which gnarled trunks and twisted boughs and ivy-covered stems and trembling leaves and bark-stripped bodies of old trees stretched out at length, were faintly seen in beautiful confusion."

Something Modern

IF we want something more modern in landscapes, here is a little bit of this century from Hardy's "Mayor of Casterbridge." It is the morning after Michael Henchard had sold his wife and infant daughter to a sailor, and the husband, having slept off his alcohol, looks out on the countryside: "The freshness of the September morning inspired and braced him as he stood. He and his family had been weary when they arrived the night before, and they had observed but little of the place; so that he now beheld it as a new thing. It exhibited itself as the top of an open down, bounded on one extreme by a plantation and approached by a winding road. . . . The spot stretched downward into valleys, and onward to other uplands, dotted with barrows, and trenches with the remains of prehistoric forts. The whole scene lay under the rays of a newly risen sun which had not as yet dried a single blade of the heavily dewed grass, whereon the shadows of the yellow and red vans were projected far away, those thrown by the fellow of each wheel being elongated in shape to the orbit of a comet. . . . He went on in silent thought, unheeding the yellow-hammers which flitted about the hedges with straws in their bills, the crows of the mushrooms, and the tinkling of the local sheep-bells whose wearers had had the good fortune not to be included in the fair."

So much for our poets and novelists, who join close observation of Nature with reflection on her and her relation to human life. If we turn to nature-writers like Jefferies we find the same combination, though with a difference of purpose. It leads us to conclude that the peculiar service of the landscapist is to arrest the attention of the casual and to awaken his powers of observation, or in other words, to enable him to see better. The amateur painter has been not the least of the contributors to the last century and a half's development of interest in and sympathy with Nature, and he has been this because everyone who, however imperfectly, sets to work to study her and to reproduce her likeness, reaps the reward of an increasing perception of her beauty, order, and multiplicity.

Author Tells Stories of Church's Ministrations

HERE follow a few stories as told by a local author, stories of real life picked up from those pathways where the Christian Church ministers to the needy ones that should ever be her chief care.

Mrs. Nellie L. McClung tells them in a recently issued booklet, and they are pearls strung on a silver thread, and the thread is the spirit of service. As it happens, the booklet is issued by the United Church of Canada—the title is "Before They Call"—but it might belong to any of the denominations. The stories put in picture from the spirit in which all the churches, during Canada's three centuries, have been, and still are, Christianizing our fair land.

The first is from the storyteller's own life. It is winter in the new land of Manitoba. "The problems of life centred around the difficulty of keeping warm. There were six of us besides my father and mother, and I was the youngest. The crisis came when my eldest sister took cold, developed pneumonia, and seemed likely to die. There was no doctor nearer than Portage la Prairie, eighty miles away. "My mother gave up in despair. The Manitoba blizzard roared past the little house, and death was in the blast. Suddenly a knock sounded on the door and a man on snowshoes entered. It was the Reverend Thomas Hall, a missionary of the Methodist Church, who had come to Milford, five miles away. He had heard that there was a sick girl some place southeast of Milford, and braving the storm, set out to find us.

"How he managed to make his way across the billows of snow God only knows! But he did. He knew something about medicine, and he stayed with us until my sister was out of danger. I remember yet how he prayed—how we all prayed—and how real God was."

For this ministry of the home missionary the storyteller finds the title of her booklet and the spirit of home missions in a phrase from a Bible promise: "Before they call." Thomas Hall had come across the snow before the family in the Manitoba shack called. Before they knew there was the slightest chance of anyone's hearing them if they did call "in that wild waste of snow and silence."

In a Mission Hospital

IN a mission hospital north of Edmonton a Ruthenian woman lay tossing in pain. She had been brought in fatally injured by a runaway team. She knew no English, but when the missionary doctor came he was able to speak to her in her own tongue, and did his best to quiet her fears. But her agony of mind increased as the night wore on.

"The doctor was a man of imagination and understanding. So he called for candles, which he lighted and placed at the foot of the bed. Red Christmas candles they were, but to poor Mary Ragowski, about to set out on her long journey, they were beacons of light on a dark way.

"Something else was needed for her comfort and sustaining, and still her eyes searched the doctor's face and her clutching hands pleaded for something. One of the nurses had a Greek Catholic prayer-book, and from it the doctor began to read aloud in her own language, the prayer for the passing soul. Through the gathering darkness Mary heard the blessed words that had comforted her mother and her grandmother in their last moments, and on this strong spar, her troubled soul floated fearlessly out on the "unreturning tide."

By way of comment the narrator adds: "This is the spirit of our hospitals. There is no attempt to destroy anyone's faith, no breaking down of any sacred tradition, no idle rivalry or competition with any other form of religion."

"Maybe I'll See John"

AN old Indian in Calgary lay dying, troubled in his mind and full of fears. His wife tried to comfort him. He would see the great white throne, and the angels, and the river of life. Other friends were at his bedside and they pictured the highlands of Heaven as best they could; plenty of game, buffalo even. But nothing seemed to interest him—his pain was too real—the road before him was unknown and strange, and his soul was troubled.

"Suddenly his face brightened," the story runs. "Not at anything his friends said, but because he had a thought, a possibility had occurred to him. 'Maybe I'll see John,' he said. That was John McDougall, the missionary, who had lived among the Indians of Alberta for the full measure of his life. That was better than any picture of Heaven, John, his friend."

The scene shifts from the dying Indian on the prairie to the polyglot population of the cities. Mrs. McClung does not talk long at any time before humor ripples over her spirit and that of her hearers. "I remember All People's Mission in Winnipeg thirty years ago, when the chief need seemed to be for soap and water and clothing. I can recall the many bathtubs in the old mission and the problem of getting the children to consent to a bath. 'Don't rip me,' a little girl said to one of the helpers who found she could undress her only by the use of a pair of scissors. 'Ma will be mad if you rip me.'—I'm sewed up for the winter. It would be interesting to know where that little girl is—such is the comment—she may be a designer of ladies' gowns in the city, a teacher in a high school, an artist, or a writer; for the people who were cared for at All People's Mission are among our best citizens now.

The film glides westward to Vancouver and to the First United Church, where Rev. Andrew Roddan ministers to his downtown folk.

"There is the story of the wooden leg. A man limped in one day and announced that he had mended his leg for the last time. It was crumbling and splitting and doing everything a leg should not do. If Mr. Roddan could not find a new leg he was washed up and done. Mr. Roddan called in Miss J., his secretary. Miss J. remembered. There was a wooden leg in the storeroom. It had been bequeathed to them by the owner on his deathbed. Forty dollars was required to make it fit the applicant, which was cheerfully paid by the Relief Department of the Government. And so another man was put on his feet!"

Missions Interlock

TOUCHING on the cosmopolitan character of Canada's population the author comments on the way that home and foreign missions interlock. "People come here from many countries and sometimes go back to their own again. A Chinese nurse, who graduated at Lamont, Alberta, is now the superintendent of a hospital in Hong Kong, with three hundred nurses in training. A graduate of Victoria High School is a brilliant physician in her parents' native land of China. A Japanese student of the University of Alberta, whose home was in Cumberland, B.C., is now editor of The Tokio Times. A Ukrainian, who became a Christian in the Church of All Nations, Montreal, wrote back from the Ukraine, ordering a supply of Bibles for the Bible class he had organized. A missionary in India found a Hindu from British Columbia reading the New Testament in his native village."

The amalgamating of Canada's polyglot peoples into "one Canadian citizenship is one of the results of the Church's ministrations as given by means of the various Churches of All Nations that are placed at strategic points across the Dominion. While in Victoria the other day, the superintendent of the Church of All Nations in Toronto, Rev. John I. Mackay, told the present writer of the thirty different nationalities under the one roof, and of services held in six languages by various national ministers. These services are Finnish, Ukrainian, Hungarian, Dutch, Japanese, and an international service in English.

How the building came to have three doors at the main entrance is, he said, a parable of the unification of diverse national tempers under one Christian roof. One national group vowed it would not enter through the same door as a certain other group. So there were provided the main door and one at each side of it. In this way the protesting nationals could go through the lobby direct to their chapel without contact with those to whom they objected.

For a period the differing streams kept apart. But in the course of several months all the nationalities, including the objectors, were rubbing elbows at the one main entrance.

Turning back for a moment to Mrs. McClung's moving stories, the present writer readily acknowledges her booklet as yet another instance of her "championing of causes and movements which make for a Christian Canada."

Queen Is Patron of Antique Exhibit

QUEEN Mary is patron of this year's Antique Dealers' Fair at Grosvenor House, and has lent several picked treasures from her collection at Marlborough House. Chief among them is the George II silver cup designed by the Huguenot smith, Simon Pantin, in 1730, and presented to King George V and Queen Mary by their children on the occasion of their Silver Jubilee in 1935.

Lord Lee of Fareham has lent some of his remarkable silver trophies from White Lodge, Richmond, and the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths have allowed some of the best examples of the work of the great English goldsmiths and silversmiths of the past to be shown. These include a remarkable tankard of 1661, made from the silver supports of the canopy carried at Charles II's coronation by the Barons of the Cinque Ports, whose perquisite the silver became.

The Loan Section

A PART from the Loan Section, everything at the Antique Dealers' Fair is for sale. Nothing made after 1930 is on view, and this year two periods are stressed: the early nineteenth century and the mediaeval period. According to one well-known furniture dealer, a vogue for early nineteenth century and Victorian furniture is upon us. This is borne out by the popularity of mahogany and the darker woods, which is quite ousting the glass and chromium modernist trend. The Duke and Duchess of Gloucester have some magnificent mahogany pieces at York House. Walls and furniture fabrics provide the modern treatment for mahogany, and this wood looks well with the plain walls so much in vogue today.

Many Gothic and mediaeval pieces are shown at the Fair—chairs, tables, fifteenth-century tapestries, velvets, silks, early mediaeval jewelry, statuettes, wood-carvings. There is not much furniture prior to 1500, but ivory pieces may go back as far as the twelfth century, and some of the jewelry is Byzantine.

Antique dealers in Britain have enjoyed a very satisfactory business year, due to the presence of so many American and Dominion Coronation visitors. A number of Americans are visiting this Fair, which has been held every Fall since 1932.

Britain's Security

Great Political Parties Meet—Marquess of Londonderry—Ended Border Wars—Home Building Programme—The King's Holiday

By J. Edward Norcross

LONDON.—(By Mail).—The imperialism of the past is not the imperialism of today.

"Socialists in all countries feel safer with an armed Britain because Britain, the mother of democracy, has always stood for democratic principles."

"Under the British flag there is more democracy than in any country in the world. . . . We have fought for a hundred years building up democratic liberty."

"Shall we allow New Zealand to be destroyed by the Fascist forces of Japan? Shall we allow Australia to be overrun by the marauders of the East as they are overrunning China?"

"What is the biggest thing these people could attack? It is the British Empire. All that we ask is that we try and keep our democracy safe!"

Two great political gatherings have been held during the same week, that of the Labor Party at Bournemouth, one of the aristocratic seaside resorts, and that of the Conservatives at popular Scarborough.

The address quote above might have been given at Scarborough. It was, however, delivered at Bournemouth by a Labor Member of Parliament, Mr. James Walker.

Mr. Walker spoke at the end of a day-long debate on a resolution offered by the Labor executive which, while criticizing the Government's foreign policy, stressed the need for this country to be equipped to play its full part in collective security, and declared that a Labor Government would be unable to reverse the present programme of rearmament.

Expect Rough Ride

THE resolution had already been approved, a month ago, by the Trades Union Congress, but, although the trades unionists dominate the party, it was expected that it would have a rough passage at Bournemouth, when the Socialist and Pacifist wings would be present in strength. It had, but there was never any doubt whether it would be carried by a big majority.

"You can't stop the spread of Fascism by resolutions or by a few dockers loading up a ship," cried Ernest Bevin, secretary of the Transport Workers, the largest trade union in the world.

"We shall soon be starved out if we are unable to resist attackers," said J. R. Clynes, speaking from knowledge gained when he was Food Controller during the latter part of the Great War.

"You who say you would offer armed resistance to protect a Socialist state, but not a capitalist state, should remember that millions of Socialists in Britain would be in need of defence if Britain were attacked."

"Pacifism may be glorious, but as a political policy it would be deadly for this party."

"When Labor was in power we ourselves strengthened the Navy and developed the Air Force," Mr. Clynes concluded.

Then came the ructions. The member for Nelson, where a Labor Council refused to recognize either the Silver Jubilee or the Coronation, sneered at Mr. Clynes, declaring that his speech might have fitted in any time between 1914 and 1918.

Lord Ponsonby said approval of armaments would place a tremendous weapon in the hands of the Tories. "In 1931," he continued, "we were betrayed by certain individuals. I hope that in 1937 we are not going to be betrayed by our own executive."

Mr. George Lansbury, whose pacifism compelled him to resign the Parliamentary leadership of the Labor Party two or three years ago, said what was needed was an international conference to discuss how to share the world.

The old war-horse was heard with respect and sympathy, but when the votes were counted on the card system, those of the pacifists numbered only 228,000 against 2,187,000 cast for the pro-armaments resolution.

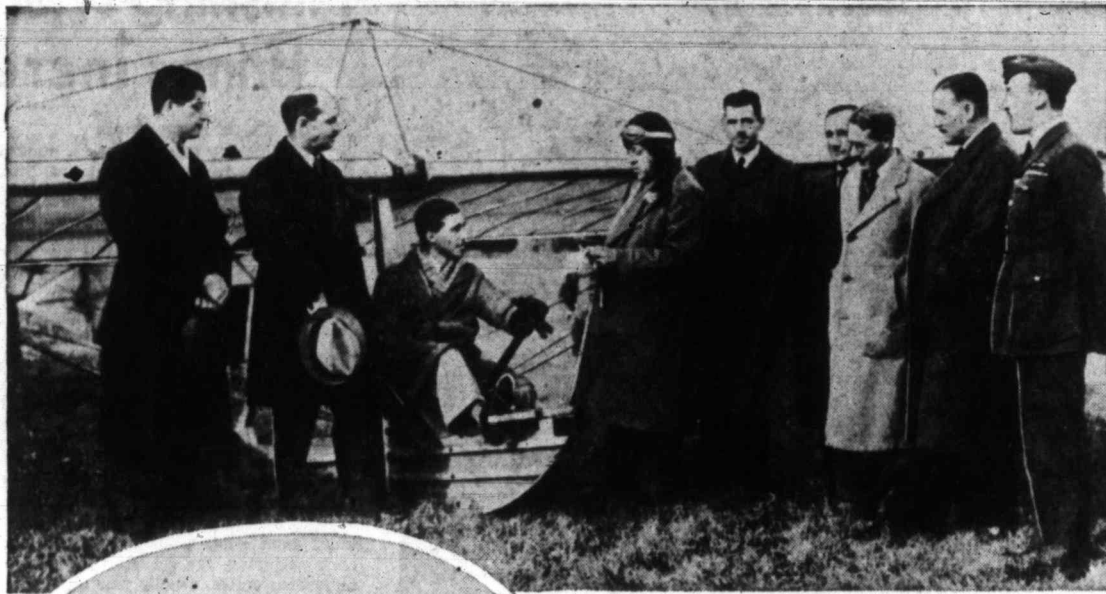

Change of Policy

THIS complete change of policy on the armaments issue, on which the Labor members were opposing the Government tooth and nail in Parliament but a few months ago, would have been sufficient of itself to make the Bournemouth conference remarkable.

But it will also be remembered as the conference at which the trade unionist section passed a self-denying ordinance as a result of which they surrendered their absolute control of the executive, agreeing to changes by which they will elect directly only twelve members in an executive of twenty-five instead of, as formerly, thirteen in twenty-three.

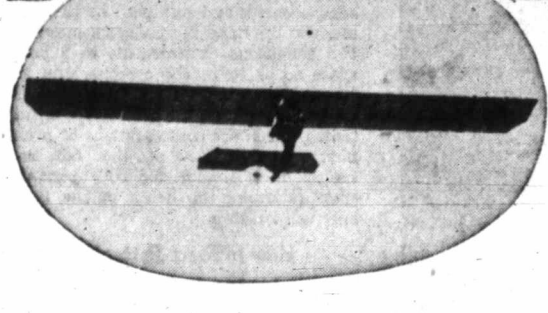

Moreover, they have consented to a change in the mode of election to the executive which leaves the Socialist affiliates free to elect their own representatives on the governing body. Hitherto they have had only the right of nomination, the whole conference, with its enormous preponderance of trade union delegates, voting on the names submitted.

Finally, the annual conference is to be held in the Spring hereafter instead of in the Fall. As has been pointed out in this correspondence, it has been the custom for the Trades Union Congress to meet first, and what the Trades Union Congress decided was virtually binding on the party conference held later. By meeting in the Spring, before the T.U.C. convenes, the party will be much more free to shape its policy as it sees fit.

UNIVERSITY STUDENTS ARE GLIDER ENTHUSIASTS

While flying enthusiasts in other countries, notably Germany and the United States, are developing gliding to a remarkable degree, amateurs in Canada are also seeking to keep Canada in the news with their efforts to master this phase of flying. McGill University Flying Club, in Montreal, has been promoting an interest in gliding for several years, and, with the latest type of machine, shown in actual flight in the bottom photograph, recently presented to them by Norman Holland, a prominent Montreal business man, they hope to improve their knowledge of the art. In the top photograph, showing the actual presentation ceremony at St. Hubert airport, are a number of prominent Ottawa officials connected with the flying services, including, from left to right, C. W. Crossland, Department of National Defence, Ottawa; Wing Commander A. T. Cowley, superintendent, Air Regulations, Department of Transport, Ottawa; Dr. L. R. Richardson, president, McGill University Flying Club, in the glider; Norman Holland, donor of the glider; Flight Lieutenant A. O. Adams, staff officer, Department of National Defence; F. I. Banghart, airport manager; Squadron Leader Allan Ferrier, chief aeronautical engineer, Ottawa; Stuart Graham, Inspector of Civil Aviation, and Squadron Leader Frank McGill.

Given Their Choice

POSSIBLY these changes in the constitution influenced Sir Stafford Cripps and Professor Laski in making their great decision. Mr. Herbert Morrison had practically given them their choice—to abandon their campaign for a "united front," which meant taking in the Communists and the Independent Labor Party, or to be thrown out of the Labor Party.

Mr. Morrison was speaking to a resolution repudiating the campaign for the "united front." Recognition of the Communists, he said, would split the Labor Party from top to bottom.

"The whole object of the Communist Party," he continued, "is not to work with the Labor Party, but to capture its membership for the Communist Party."

"There are Labor members who have not played the game. . . . But we cannot go on like this for ever. I hope we shall not have the job of expelling them."

Mr. Morrison's speech was the best delivered during the whole course of the conference. It put him in line again for the party leadership in Parliament, a matter which the Labor Party members decide at the beginning of every session.

Anyway, especially when the vote went seven to one against them, Sir Stafford and Professor Laski saw the point, renounced their heresy and were taken into camp. And then, most astonishingly, they were elected members of the executive, the new rules coming into play.

Whether or not they will prove more of a liability than an asset at election time remains to be seen. Quite evidently, Sir Stafford is not minded to go down a political cul-de-sac. Leadership, like Mr. Maxton's, of an infinitesimal group of extremists, as he knows, will get him nowhere. On the other hand, so long as he remains in the Labor Party, his hour may come, for the Labor Party is not too well equipped with first-class brains.

That in 1928 and 1929 there were 8,000 suicides by ex-Servicemen and that about one-third of them were of men who had been affected by gas was the startling statement shot at the Conservative convention at Scarborough by Mr. E. J. Griffiths, a Yorkshire delegate.

Adulation of the Government, which, until then, had been the chief occupation of the convention, went sharply into reverse when Mr. Griffiths moved what amounted to a vote of censure on the Minister of Pensions.

"This conference," stated the resolution, "is of the opinion that there are many ex-Servicemen who, as a result of injuries sustained or ailments contracted during their service, are suffering serious physical incapacity, but who are either receiving no pensions at all or only such as are inadequate to their needs." The resolution went on to demand an immediate inquiry.

Mr. Griffiths said he pleaded especially for a reconsideration of pensions for the many men who were so eager to get back to their civil jobs after the war that they declared themselves fit when they really were not. Many poison gas cases were quite slight at first, but gradually became worse till a man was obliged to give up his work.

Speaker after speaker followed in the same strain. The ex-Servicemen had to struggle to get his pension, said one; where doubt existed about the war origin of a disability, the man should get the benefit of the doubt, not the Government.

Honors Its Pledges

THE Minister of Pensions, Mr. H. Ramsbotham, had the extraordinary experience of being heckled at a gathering of supporters of the Government of which he was a member.

Mr. Ramsbotham began by denying that there was any basis for the first part of the resolution, and was met with a storm of cries of dissent.

"To the best of my belief," he continued, "this country has honored its pledges to these men."

"No," "Never," shouted a number of delegates.

The Ministry, Mr. Ramsbotham proceeded, entertained every claim supported by evidence, and the onus of proof was not on the man. In the great majority of cases the Ministry helped him to prove his case.

Again there were shouts of "No," and Mr. Ramsbotham retorted sharply, "I am talking about what I know."

Nobody, he said, had greater experience with these cases than the British Legion, which, in its latest annual report, had stated that no case of late claims for pensions had been unjustly rejected.

As to the suggested inadequacy of pensions, the scale had been approved by Parliament in 1919, when the cost of living was 115 points above that of 1914. Today the same scales applied, yet the cost of living was sixty points lower, or fifty-five above that of 1914.

He could not agree, he said, to the setting up of an inquiry, which would first have to decide whether an inquiry was necessary.

But the convention had taken the bit between its teeth and the resolution was carried amid cheers.

Return to Cabinet

THE Marquess of Londonderry is said to be slated for restoration to the Cabinet. He has just been elected president of the National Union of Conservative and Unionist Associations—the highest ornamental post and honor in the Tory Party.

The term "Conservative and Unionist," like "Liberal-Conservative" in Canada, crystallizes political history. It dates back to the time when Gladstone's first Home Rule Bill split the Liberal Party in this country. The Liberals who crossed the floor of the House became known as Liberal-Unionists, and the battles of the combined forces were fought under the "Unionist" banner.

Gradually the Liberals who had gone over became indistinguishable from Conservatives—the Chamberlains are a case in point—and in England the local associations dropped the "Unionist" and became simply Conservative associations. In Scotland, however, where the Liberal Party had been predominant, the term "Unionist" has been retained. Hence the "National Union of Conservative and Unionist Associations."

Lord Londonderry, when Air Minister in the MacDonald administration, attended the Disarmament Conference of 1932. Afterwards he told the House of Lords that when taking part in it he had "had the utmost difficulty in preserving the use of the bombing airplane." He had refused Britain's consent to its abolition on the ground that it was needed to keep the tribes in order on the Northwest Frontier of India.

When Baldwin became Premier he dropped Lord Londonderry. Now for years it has been the custom for Lady Londonderry to give a great reception to the Conservative members on the eve of the opening of Parliament. There was none in 1935, the Prime Minister stating briefly that the "moment was not opportune."

Quite evidently Lord Londonderry's relations with Mr. Chamberlain are of a happier nature. It is said that the Marquess will join the Government and by so doing will join the Government and by so doing will join the Government and by so doing will join the Government.

ablaze with jewels, when she receives her thousand or two thousand guests at the head of the grand staircase the evening before Parliament reconvenes.

Conservatives Meet

ADDRESSING the Conservative convention at Scarborough, the Prime Minister admitted that the progress of rearmament was not yet as fast as he would like, or, he added, as it soon would be.

The preparatory stage, he continued, was now completed and production had begun in earnest. He expressed his confidence in the new Secretary of State for War, Mr. Hore-Belisha; the Army, though small, would, when finally equipped, be thoroughly adapted to the task it had to fulfil, he said.

The aggregate tonnage now being built or sanctioned by Parliament for the British Navy exceeded half a million, and the naval personnel was being extended at a rate never attempted before in peace time.

Powerful machines for the Air Force, unsurpassed in equipment and design, were now steadily coming forward from the manufacturers.

"You have heard of the shadow factories," Mr. Chamberlain said. "Where twelve months ago was nothing but bare ground, airplane shops have sprung up. Today, in half a dozen different places, an army of workers, as keen as it is skillful, is at work operating the very latest type of machine tools. . . . In the space of the last two years our home-based force has been nearly trebled, an expansion at a rate and on a scale never attempted before."

Touching on ordinary commercial business, Mr. Chamberlain said it continued to show astonishing resilience. "There is still no visible sign of the slump which our political opponents continue to prophesy with such obviously pleasurable anticipation," he added.

The Premier quoted some figures. In the first six months of this year, he said, industrial production as a whole was 50 per cent greater than in the first half of 1931. Production of pig-iron was 100 per cent more; of crude steel 120 per cent more; of artificial silk 220 per cent more, and of motors more than 100 per cent more.

During the five years 1932-36, 2,688 new factories had been opened in Great Britain, providing work for more than 250,000 people. The amount of merchant tonnage under construction was 120 per cent greater than at the end of June, 1931, while the amount of British shipping laid up was only 3 per cent of what it was six years ago. In the same period imports had risen by 40 per cent and exports by 32 per cent. The number of insured persons in employment had risen by 2,000,000.

The Premier scouted the possibility that old-age pensions could be paid on the scale proposed by the Labor Party when the country was committed to so vast a programme of expenditure on armaments. The scale, which doubles present pensions, had just been adopted at Bournemouth as a part of Labor's "Immediate Programme" of reforms.

On Foreign Policy

MR. Chamberlain's address, of course, was the high point of the Scarborough convention. He began with a statement on foreign policy which was at once cabled all over the world. It will, however, have been superseded before this appears in print by that he will make when Parliament opens.

Probably by that time we shall know, too, whether sanctions are to be applied against Japan. It may be said here that Lancashire is not now quite so keen for sanctions as it was a few days ago. Lancashire puts great trust in the wisdom of the Earl of Derby, and the Earl of Derby said the other day that he hoped the Government would not go in for sanctions.

Lord Derby has been called the uncrowned King of Lancashire. He had been traveling all over the county, taking part in public functions, and had arrived at a little manufacturing town where he was to open a Conservative bazaar.

Very regretfully he said that he could not now take the lead in politics in the county that he would like. He was now Lord-Lieutenant of the county, and the moment an election writ was issued he had to cease all political activity.

As there was no by-election pending in Lancashire just then, His Lordship was able to speak his mind. He thought sanctions would be unwise, he said, but if the Government chose to apply them, so be it. It was the duty of good Conservatives to support the Government anyway.

One is reminded by Lord Derby of the late Duke of Devonshire, once the colleague of Mr. Gladstone. The country had the same confidence in the Duke's judgment that Lancashire has in Lord Derby's. So long as the Duke stood for Free Trade, neither Joseph Chamberlain nor anybody else could make any headway with tariff proposals.

Ended Border Wars

THE advent of King James I to the throne of England, uniting England and Scotland, brought to an end five hundred years of Border warfare between the Douglases and the Percys. Normally each family had charge of its side of the Border in the name of their respective kings. In practice they raided and fought each other in pursuance of a feud carried on from generation to generation.

It was their pleasant custom to go hunting on each other's lands, taking the armies which they maintained with them. The hunting being interrupted by the arrival of the party of the other part, a battle ensued and was fought with such ferocity that possibly few on either side returned home to tell the tale.

Of Chevy-Chase, an encounter which began by a Percy taking his way there "to drive the deers with hound and horn," it is written in an old ballad:

"Of twenty hundred Scottish spears, scarce fifty-five did flye;
Of fifteen hundred Englishmen, went home but fifty-three;
The rest were slain at Chevy-Chase,
Under the greene woode tree."

Both the Percy and the Douglas concerned in that little affair were killed.

The Percys and the Douglases were a law unto themselves. If the sovereign of one or the other country became too insistent on the vassalage of the baron who owed him allegiance, they were quite capable of joining forces against him. Thus it came about that Percy and Douglas fought side by side against Henry IV at Shrewsbury, where the former was killed and the latter taken prisoner.

The enmity of the two great houses, although it could no longer take active form, probably continued for long after the Border had no longer to be defended from either side. But it is all over now. For the young Marquis of Clydesdale, heir of the House of Douglas, is to marry Lady Elizabeth Percy, daughter of the Duke of Northumberland.

It is said to be a love match, and all the north from Tees to Forth is interested in it. But not as it would have been five hundred years ago, when the Douglas would have had to carry off his fair lady and more than one bloody battle would have been fought over her in the Cheviots.

There may be bonfires on the hills when the marriage takes place. In other days there might have been burning villages instead.

Home Building Plan

NOW that the British house-building programme is in a fair way to completion, it is beginning to be seen that something better might have been produced. It is not that the new houses and flats are not good of their sort. As shelters they are a big improvement on the dwellings they have replaced. The trouble is that, notwithstanding the modern improvements they embody, they are not homelike.

"You can be homely in a slum and very unhomely in a modern tenement," said Lord Horder, the King's Physician, the other day. He was addressing the National Coal Convention.

"Reaction against slums," he continued, "has led to the mass production of a type of living-room which makes the modern operating theatre look cheerful by comparison."

Lord Horder does not approve of the complete substitution of central heating, as in tenement buildings, for open fires. He confessed himself an advocate of the open fireplace.

Many modern homes, he said, were heated by less healthy means. There should be at least one open fireplace in every home.

True, there was the smoke problem, and it would be an enormous blessing if smoke could be eliminated.

But "give us coal fires which we all want," he concluded, "and let them be as clean and safe as possible."

Destroy Old Cottages

SOME rural authorities, suffering from an excess of zeal, are taking advantage of the Slum Clearance Act, passed last year and meant for congested areas in cities and towns, to destroy picturesque old cottages which might easily be reconditioned.

The action of the local Council at Newlyn, in Cornwall, has evoked the wrath of lovers of beautiful England all over the country. The Council has condemned a row of lovely old cottages, nominally on the ground that they are unfit for habitation, but really to widen the road in front of them, beyond which is the sea, for auto traffic.

According to reports, Newlyn is not the only example of this sort of vandalism. Local authorities in many parts of the country are scheduling thousands of picturesque cottages as slums.

It is expected that legislation will be introduced when Parliament meets to put a stop to the depredations of unimaginative councillors.

King on Holiday

THE two months' holiday so well earned by the King and Queen has come to an end, and they are once more at Buckingham Palace, whence they will one day soon drive out in state for His Majesty to open the new session of Parliament.

The holiday has been one such as any well-to-do family, determined on rest and quiet, might have enjoyed. The King has gone out walking day after day, tramping over hundreds of miles of the moors. He has had good sport with the grouse, and latterly has gone out on the hills deer-stalking.

The Queen, like any other great lady, has busied herself with her many interests on the estate and on Deeside. The whole family have picnicked among the heather on fine afternoons, much to the delight of the little Princesses, and on warm evenings Their Majesties have often been seen walking together by the stream enjoying the sunset.

There has been little entertaining on the grand scale and the house parties have been small. In short, King George and Queen Elizabeth have had as real a holiday as is possible for them, since the King can never wholly free himself from the cares of state.

U.S. Cotton Crop

THE Government report from Washington that the United States will harvest the second largest cotton crop in the history of the country has caused dismay in Lancashire.

Prices have gone down and still lower prices are threatened. The manufacturers are afraid to buy because a slump might find them loaded down with raw materials which could be spun and woven only at a loss.

It is fervently hoped in the manufacturing districts that steps will be taken in the United States to stabilize prices, a hope shared by employees as well as employers, for Lancashire has had many bitter memories of short time in the mills owing to the vagaries of cotton quotations.

Once, many years ago, it had to break a corner. Speculators in the United States had secured control of so much cotton that prices were rising rapidly. There was only one way to meet the situation, namely, to cut off the demand.

Employers and employees conferred and agreed to limit production, the mills working one-quarter or one-third time. This went on for some weeks. The speculators were stuck with the cotton to which they had committed themselves; the corner was smashed, prices fell, and the Lancashire mills hummed again on full time.

Gilbert and Sullivan Operas in Pictures

THE Gilbert and Sullivan operas are to be filmed at last, and in England by an English company. The first will be "The Yeomen of the Guard."

The Gilbert and Sullivan operas have been for years—ever since, in fact, sound came into the pictures—the great unalloyed prize of the studios. Every major studio in Hollywood has been after them, and the owners of the world rights, the D'Oyly Carte estate, have received offers running into fantastic figures.

The D'Oyly Carte estate, however, does not control the United States copyright, and sequences from "The Mikado" and "Pinafore" have been used for that market. But Hollywood knows perfectly well that the big money for the Savoy operas will be found in the British Empire market.

"There is a certain satisfaction," one commentator says, "in the thought that this potential fortune has now been acquired by a British company. There is far more satisfaction in the thought that the Gilbert and Sullivan operas, as English as steak and kidney pudding of the Sussex Downs, will now be made by English-speaking players, and at home."

The suggestion has been made that the "Yeomen" should be done in color, and that a useful length would be about an hour and a half. This would take about sixty minutes out of the opera, but, after all, though no devotee would admit it, much of Gilbert's dialogue might be spared without any great sense of loss.

Until the casting takes place, the selection of players will be a popular indoor amusement among Savoyards now that the Summer time has come to an end and the long Winter nights have begun.—J.E.N.

"Mummy," said Angelie, "when I get married will it be to a man like daddy?" "Of course, my darling." Her daughter frowned at this. "But if I don't get married shall I be like auntie, then?" "Yes, my dear, you will." The little girl sighed wearily. "My stars," she murmured, "what a fix!"

Suburb and Country

AGRICULTURE IS A FIRST PRINCIPLE: ON IT RESTS THE LIFE AND HAPPINESS OF MANKIND—Julian A. Dimock

Save Dahlias and Gladioli For Planting Next Season

NO plants show the result of frost damage sooner than dahlias. On the first really severe morning, the growth is blackened beyond recall.

You may witness such a sight any day now. As soon as you do, cut down the plants to within four inches of soil level, tie a clearly written label bearing the name of the variety to the stem stump left on, and lift with a four-tined fork.

Prompt action after frosting is very desirable, because some of the modern kinds are so fleshy at the roots that, when growth ceases, decay soon starts up in the damp soil.

Use your fork with discretion. Some of the tubers spread a good distance, and you must avoid piercing them.

Having lifted plants up, wash each root thoroughly under a running tap, or with a hosepipe, until no crumbs of soil are left. Moulds and millipedes, two serious storage enemies, lie very near dahlia tubers. That is why every bit of soil must be carefully washed off.

After washing, ripen the roots in the sun for four or five days, bringing them in at nights, if there are signs of frost. By so doing you change the condition of the sap from the crude to the mature, thus definitely increasing the keeping chances. Where weather conditions are against outdoor ripening, lay out the roots in a greenhouse or frame for ten days or so.

Store Roots in Sand

WHEN ripening is complete, store the roots in sand, after examining them and removing tubers which show any signs of disease.

If you have floor space, spread two inches of sand on it. Then lay your tubers close together, and just cover them with sand.

The shed must be frost-proof and free from drip.

Open the door on favorable occasions during Autumn and Winter to prevent the atmosphere becoming overcharged with humidity.

Should the tubers shrivel, take them out of the sand, and sprinkle them with water. Shrivelling is almost as great an enemy as rot. That is why we do not favour the old method of hanging the roots stem downwards from the rafters of a shed.

That plan was all right with some of the older, hardier kinds, but it won't do with the moderns which, being more thin-skinned and sappy, shrivel more quickly.

Should it be more convenient to store in boxes this method is quite satisfactory, if the boxes are sound. Use sand as a preservative in just the same way as advised above.

Storing the Gladioli

GLADIOLI are now practically over. They have had a good run this season.

The type of growth developed suggests that next year's flowering prospects are better than usual. It will, therefore, be well worth while to take special pains with harvesting and storing.

As a preliminary, cut off each faded flower spike an inch or two below the bottom bloom. When this is left on, as it sometimes is, rot is set up so quickly that the corn or root stock is affected.

Now lift the plants carefully with a fork. On no account attempt to pull them up, or you are sure to break some roots or, worse still, break off the growth at the soil level.

When the latter serious mistake occurs, next year's flowering prospects of the bulb concerned are irretrievably spoiled.

Having got up all the plants and made sure of the varieties, tie them loosely in bundles of a dozen or so, hanging these up, leaf downwards, in a cool, shady, airy shed, or you can lay them in seed boxes.

When the Foliage Withers

NOW begins the process of leaf withering. The leaves empty their contents into the corns, withering all the time. It may take them three or four weeks to die back completely. When they have done so, unloose the bundles and clip or cut off the leaves and roots.

You will now see that the corn you planted last March or April is wizened and obviously useless, but out of it there has grown a beautiful fresh young corn. It is this which you store and plant next year.

So rub off the wizened part and set up the young corns in single layers in boxes. Store the latter in a dry, airy, frostproof place.

In addition to the young corns, there may be quite a quantity of "spawn." Sometimes it clusters at the base of the young corn, sometimes at the base of the old one.

New spawn consists of baby gladiolus corns which are well worth preserving.

Place about half an inch of moist sand at the bottom of the box and set the spawn on it. During Winter, sprinkle sand with water whenever it dries.

In Spring plant the spawn in a nursery bed. It will flower the year after next.

The Lifting of Celery

WHEN lifting celery, there are two important points to consider. The first is to get up the plant cleanly and without damage, the second is to safeguard the interests of the plants that remain.

Use a spade. Start at one end of the trench, and remove sufficient soil to expose the first plant or pair of plants. Then push in your spade blade straight down until you are sure you are underneath the roots.

You know the depth you made the trench. This is a guide as to how deeply you must thrust in. Having reached the right depth, give a sharp heave upwards, and the plant will come out quite cleanly. If you push in your spade at an angle, you will stab many a valuable plant, and spoil it for culinary purposes.

When you have taken up as many plants as required lay them on one side, and cover up the one or two exposed plants in the trench, otherwise frost will rot them. Now loosen the ground which you trod when lifting, giving it a slight slope away from the trench.

Top and tail the lifted celery near your home or tool-shed, burning the unwanted stuff immediately as protection against disease.

Plant Bulbs for Series of Flowers Indoors During the Winter

WHEN the last flowers of the late Fall have faded away, it is possible to have flowers in the home for several weeks during the Winter months. The cost is nominal and the effort small. These blooms can be provided by bulbs in a large variety of color. To get the bulbs to flower successfully, it is necessary to start them for several weeks in darkness in a cool cellar. The first essential is to make sure that the bulbs themselves are of good quality. A good plan is to buy them early in the season, when they are likely to be more vigorous than those which have been lying about the store for several weeks. Good bulbs should be firm to the touch; heavy in comparison to their size, and of good size according to their variety.

The bulbs should be potted as soon as they can be obtained from the seed store or dealer. By removing the pots from the cellar, after the bulbs have taken root, a succession of blooms can be obtained over a long period, at intervals of ten days or two weeks. Some bulbs can be grown in water only, others in prepared peat, and still others in soil. The varieties that do best in water are Chinese Sacred Lily, Paper White Narcissus, and Hyacinths.

The first two are grown in bowls and the bulbs kept in place by small stones. A small piece of charcoal should be placed at the bottom to keep the water clean. Hyacinths are grown in special glasses, shaped so that the bulbs are held just above water.

Value of Fibre Compost

PREPARED fibre compost can be obtained from seed firms and it is ready prepared for use. Its chief advantage over earth is that it is used in fancy water-tight bowls. The fibre should be made slightly moist and a layer laid at the base of the bowl. The bulbs should be arranged on this, with fibre filled in around them. Enough space should be left at the top so that water can be added easily. The number of bulbs must not be allowed to touch each other or the sides of the bowl. Daffodils, tulips and hyacinths can all be grown in fibre.

The most inexpensive way to grow bulbs is in soil in clay pots. The ordinary garden soil, if not too heavy, can be used. Heavy soil should be mixed with sand and leaf soil in order to make it porous.

Bulbs for the outdoor garden should be planted in the Autumn before the hard frosts come or set in. The depth at which they should be planted depends largely upon the type of the soil, but an average depth varying from three to four times the diameter of the bulb is a good guide.

Estimating Plant Needs in Spring Flowers

THE following are the distances at which Spring flowers should be planted: Wallflowers, 12 inches, 9 per square yard; Darwin tulips, 10 inches (13); early flowering tulips, hyacinths, daffodils and polyanthus, 9 inches (16); forget-me-nots, double daisies and aubretias 6 inches (36).

Knowing these figures you will have no difficulty in calculating the number of plants required for straight borders and rectangular beds. Measure the length and the width in yards, multiply one by the other and you get the number of square yards.

Round and oval beds are more difficult, but the following method will help you. In the case of a round bed, measure the diameter in yards, multiply it by itself, find three-quarters of the result, and you get the number of square yards in the bed.

Now an oval bed. Multiply the length (in yards) by the maximum width, and find three-quarters of the result. That will be the number of square yards in the bed.

A HEAD OF GREAT CHARACTER

When the photographer snapped this picture of Colony Dunure Lens, twelve-year-old Clydesdale stallion owned by John Morrison, Jr., of Parkville, he selected a subject that is dear to the hearts of urban and rural residents alike. This winner of many prizes in the show ring may be getting up in years, but he has lost none of the fine qualities that go to make "character" in the appearance of a fine horse.

The Degree of Maturity at Picking Determines Quality of Fruit

QUANTITY of fruit is largely determined by the degree of maturity in the fruit at time of picking. This does not imply that fruit should be ripe or that so-called "tree-ripened" fruit is most desirable. Maturity is a stage in the development of fruit when sufficient growth has been attained to ensure that ripening will result in high quality, without shrinkage or shrivelling and without premature breakdown. Investigations conducted at the Summerland Experimental Station have revealed the importance of certain maturity standards.

While general principles apply in consideration of the maturity and storage life of all fruits, it has been found that each variety must be studied to determine its proper maturity for picking and its reaction to storage treatment.

Early varieties of fruit in general ripen rapidly after maturity is reached. They have a soft texture and a short storage life. In many ways they are inferior to later varieties of the same kind, but they fill an early demand and should be rushed into consumption without delay. They should be picked at the first sign of maturity, and with most early sorts sufficient size is the usual guide.

Pears Are Susceptible

PEARS are particularly susceptible to the development of undesirable qualities and storage troubles if picked before gaining maturity. The firmness of the flesh, as measured by a mechanical pressure tester, is a fairly reliable aid in determining maturity in pears. "For Bartlett, grown in the Okanagan Valley, a pressure of about eighteen pounds indicated picking maturity and resulted in perfect ripening. Other varieties have corresponding pressure tests, but the pressure should always be taken properly and associated with tree conditions as well as fruit changes, such as the slight break from dead green to yellow, and a certain "finish" to the skin. Over-maturity on the tree must, however, be avoided, because such pears either become woody or break down quickly.

Main crop apples present several differences in maturity index. McIntosh show a browning of the seeds when the fruit is ready to harvest, but late Winter varieties, such as Newtown and Winesap, do not gain maturity until several weeks after the seeds turn brown.

Red Strain in Apples

THE new red strains in apple varieties have caused some concern, because the red skin color develops before maturity. With these a reliable guide to picking is the change in flesh color. The greenish white flesh turns to clear white when the fruit is ready to pick, and later, upon ripening, turns to a creamy yellow. The Red Delicious has been found to reach maturity about the same time as the standard strain.

Other varieties of apples show indications of maturity by changes in skin color on the unblushed portion. This is commonly indicated by the green round color changing to an overcast of yellow. Maturity should not advance too far, however, before picking, because meanness or breakdown may result. For the Jonathan apple, a color chart has been devised showing the color representing maturity for picking which will result in a minimum of storage trouble.

Proper Feeding Checks Pig's Rooting Habit

NATURE furnished all the pig family with powerful snouts as a means of finding part of their food. Rooting, therefore, is a natural habit. Nevertheless, it is a very annoying one, especially at this time of the year, and the turf of a nice paddock may be seen damaged when pigs have the run of it.

Rooting is an advantage rather than otherwise on rough land, and has often been utilized to bring about a great improvement in its fertility, but no one wants to see good grass land torn up, and therefore has his pigs ringed.

Observation shows that those pigs of any age which root least are those that have always been fed scientifically. If they have never at any time been kept short of protein and mineral matter, they do not have to search in the soil for insects and other tit-bits to make up for it.

When little pigs are running out at grass with a sow who has to root hard to find food for them, they are taught the habit and then can only be checked by ringing. But if the sow is ringed, and if she is properly fed, then it does appear to be possible to reduce the tendency to root in growing stock.

Care of Cuttings While Their Roots Develop

FOR a few days after insertion, all cuttings look a bit sorry for themselves. That is natural. They have been severed from the parents which previously gave them support.

The second stage is more hopeful. The leaves prick up and the cuttings look as though they really meant to be self-supporting plants. You see no other change in them, however. They are just erect and nothing more.

The third stage usually makes itself evident in three to four weeks. You begin to see signs of young leaf growth. That means definitely that roots have formed.

A week after this stage develops, ventilate the cold frame a little and air the cuttings under glass also. Increase the amount day by day until you are able to open the lights five or six inches.

When favorable weather prevails, ventilate to the limit of safety, avoiding cold draughts.

There is nothing to gain and everything to lose by coddling.

Stand the cuttings needing artificial heat on a light shelf or stage, water them with scrupulous care, ventilate as much as you dare, and pick over whenever there is a spot of damping off.

Finishing Market Cockerels Brings Increase in Returns

By H. S. GUTTERIDGE

COCKERELS intended for market should be carefully fattened. This statement is based upon two very important considerations: First, that that cockerels put on weight more rapidly and economically during fattening than when left on range; and second, that fattened cockerels have a greater market value because of their improved quality.

Two methods of finishing are commonly used, pen fattening and crate fattening. Provided crate feeding is properly done, better results will be obtained by this method than can be expected with pen feeding. In the latter method the cockerels are penned to a limited floor space and trough fed with fattening mash as is done in crate fattening. Birds thus treated should be decidedly superior to those killed from range without fattening. In crate fattening, the cockerels are placed in feeding crates, usually four birds to a compartment, and soft fed. As the chief merit of the fattening process comes from two conditions—confinement to a small space so as to reduce exercise, and the use of soft mixed fattening feeds—control of activity and the proper type of fattening ration are considerations of prime importance. In view of the fact that treatment is similar for both pen and crate fattening the detail of the latter will only be given.

How to Start Fattening

ONLY lice-free birds should be crated, and they should first be dosed with Epsom Salts at the rate of one pound per 100 birds so as to clean out the digestive tract. After a period of starvation, usually twenty-four hours, they are given their first food. Under most conditions, two feedings daily spaced as far apart during the day as possible will be found to be satisfactory. The food should not be left before the birds longer than half an hour, the residue being removed and disposed of otherwise. The feeding period varies usually from two to three weeks. It should be emphasized, however, that when the birds cease to gain well, or show signs of impaired appetite, fattening should be discontinued regardless of the length of time which has elapsed.

Fattening foods are always given wet, mixed with milk in some form as the mixer. It has been shown by work at the Central Experimental Farm that the dry mixture and skim-milk to drink, both always before the birds, was much less effect with milk. Skim-milk or buttermilk are most satisfactory and are generally used.

Of various cereals used experimentally at Ottawa ground yellow corn has been found to be outstanding in efficiency of production of gain. Ground wheat has been proved to produce as much gain as corn, but to require appreciably more of the grain per pound of gain than does corn. A mixture of two parts of oats to one of barley was not as satisfactory as either of the grains previously mentioned. The use of corn, therefore, is to be highly recommended as the whole or a large part of the cereal fattening ration. When white flesh is desired, white corn will probably be equally efficient, if available. Wheat also normally will be an important ingredient of the fattening mixture.

Supplementary Rations

POTATOES, raw or cooked, added in equal measure to the cereal ration were found to be only a fair supplementary fattening feed, but they may be used to advantage when culms or very cheap potatoes are available. Ten per cent of meat meal added to the cereal mixture improved the gains by approximately fifteen per cent. The addition of five per cent of ground oyster shell to the cereal ration increased feed consumption and gains by approximately ten per cent. Among the supplements experimented with, however, five per cent of mutton fat, melted and incorporated in the ration gave the most satisfactory results, the gain being increased by eighteen per cent, the efficiency of use of feed by twenty-seven per cent, the amount of fat in the carcass by fifteen per cent, and the grading of the birds by seventeen per cent.

In view of the information just quoted, therefore, the poultryman should be able to determine what feeds and supplements, or combinations of them, he can use to best advantage, knowing their fattening ability, their availability and cost in his neighborhood.

Two additional and final duties should be stressed as a climax to successful fattening; at least twelve hours of starvation should elapse before killing so as to avoid unsightly crops which degrade the birds; and the greatest possible care should be taken to keep the birds as cool as possible (not frozen) until they are marketed so that the quality and bloom so painstakingly acquired through the fattening process will not be diminished when they are examined by the buyer.

Seaweed as Fertilizer

IF you live in the neighborhood of the sea, you will find that with the equinoctial gales a good deal of seaweed is cast up on the beach. In spite of its heavy salt content, this material has excellent manurial properties. The foreshore authorities are usually only too pleased if neighboring gardeners and farmers will remove it for them.

Having got the material home, stack it in a convenient corner. Pack the heap tightly, and in three months you can use it for digging in at the same time as stable manure—and valuable stuff it is.

After Early Mums Have Finished Flowering

A FEW Japanese chrysanthemums, such as Majestic, Louisa Pickett and Birmingham, are notoriously shy cutting throwers. It is almost impossible to induce them to develop basal shoots after the plants are cut down.

That is why many gardeners who have had trouble with these varieties allow a few side-shoots to develop during October, and insert them as cuttings.

When these side-shoots are two to two and a half inches long, pull them off with the finger and thumb. Shave the stem across immediately beneath the bottom joint, and remove two or three of the bottom leaves.

Then plant the cuttings according to one of the orthodox methods—separately in thumb pots, three round the sides of a three and a half-inch pot, or two inches apart in boxes.

Attend carefully to drainage, and use a fresh, sweet, sandy soil. Until the cuttings are rooted, stand them in a cool, glass-covered box or propagating frame.

This method provides good plants for another year.

Time to Plant Bulbs

IT is time to plant daffodils. They need to be planted much earlier than tulips. Old and crowned clumps of narcissus should also be dug up now and separated, then replanted.

Daffodils can be used in formal or informal gardens with satisfaction. They are ideal for naturalizing. Virginia bluebells and daffodils make a delightful combination in the same grouping.

All daffodils are easy to grow and increase rapidly. Bulbs do best planted in a slightly shaded location. Cover the bulbs with soil to one and one-half times their own depth, or at least four inches of soil. Bonemeal is recommended as a fertilizer, but do not use fresh manure.

Make a Grand Clearance of Garden Pests at This Time of Year

AFUNDAMENTAL rule to observe for the destruction of all pests is that the attack on them should be made just when they are least able to resist. The Autumn is certainly the best time to make a grand clearance of those worms, slugs and snails, and all soil insects which have bothered you in the height of the season.

If this is done you will be able to look forward to a clean show throughout your garden next year.

Employ nature as much as you can and supplement with fumigants where necessary. Start the work on each piece of ground as it is cleared of plants, beginning by burning all top waste which harbors so many eggs and grubs, to say nothing of plant diseases.

The ash left after the burning will itself be a useful soil dressing, harmful to insects but beneficial to plants, and if you have a lot of it you can make an excellent curative dressing by mixing it with an equal quantity of powdered naphthalene.

Apply this at the rate of not less than two ounces to the square yard, leaving the soil open for a time unless you are able to let it remain all Winter to utilize the further benefit of frost penetration.

Where you want to re-plant or put in bulbs, you can do so a month after the dressing has been given.

Good for Lawns, Too

THIS kind of ash and naphthalene treatment is also good for the lawn, helping greatly against pests, but here you will be wise to use it in half doses, a second being applied in the Spring.

Do not forget the fences, where many cocoons and eggs of garden insects will Winter if you let them. Get a strong steel brush and scour the surface of the wood-work or the wall, as the case may be.

If it is clear of climbers, a coat of creosote will be useful. But if you cannot use creosote, a good substitute which does no harm to plants is a strong solution of sulphate of copper, two ounces to the pint, washed on with a fibre brush. This treatment disposes of both insects and fungi.

Ordinary quicklime is a very good general fumigant for use on a large scale. It is excellent also for sweetening and pulverizing heavy land. It is invaluable on land which is soggy and harbors slugs, and combined with the action of frosts will render it clean and free from pests for a whole season.

Use a good, stiff dose—one-half pound to the square yard—dressed on after you have forked the ground as deeply as possible. Then leave it rough and open until after Christmas.

Try Having Fun With Games Which Use A Dictionary

A BOY who once was given a dictionary discovered that his new book made it possible for him to have lots of fun with words. The boy, his sisters and his father and mother used to do all sorts of interesting things with words, for each member of the family had received a dictionary.

Many nights, after supper, they played word games. One of their favorite games was called "The Ten Mostest." Each player would choose thirty words; ten that he or she considered the most beautiful words, ten funniest words, and ten most descriptive words.

One boy called these the ten most beautiful words in the English language: Mother, rain, clover, rose, dusk, Spring, night, love, happy and meadow. That same boy called these the funniest words he knew: Hippopotamus, giraffe, cabbage, uncle, aunt, icicle, monkey, goose, tickle, gobble-gobble and hoot. It's fun to make lists of "The Ten Mostest."

Another jolly game is to find interesting words and read what the dictionary says about them. Sometimes why don't you look up these: Poke, platypus, cumulus, bellows, Percheron, turban and trombone. Can you see why people long ago invented the sound which these words represent?

A good game is for all the players to turn to the same page in the dictionary. For five minutes study all the two-syllable words on that page. Then each take a sheet of paper and see who can write the longest list and tell the meaning of each word.

A game that's lots of fun is to learn one new, hard word each day and then use it at dinner time in a sentence. The one who uses the word does not win unless everyone at the table can guess the meaning from the way it is used. Here are a few such words: Manoeuvre, snappish, sacred, ridiculous, quench, pluvial, efficient and conjecture.

Everyone of us should keep a dictionary of his own. Look up Noah Webster and see what he did. A loose-leaf notebook is a handy way to build a dictionary. Have a page for words beginning with different letters. It's lots of fun to have the "dictionary habit."

Fish-Skin Shoes and Gloves Are Like Leather

THERE is nothing like leather, says the man who works and sells it; but German scientists now say that there is something very much like leather, and that is fish-skin.

They have learned to tan this covering, and from it are manufacturing boots, gloves, handbags and other articles.

Provided it has substance enough and is not too oily, fish-skin should make quite good leather. Practically all skins contain gelatinous matter, which can be fixed in to toughen it (when it is kept cold) and submitted to the action of tannic acid or other tanning agents. Among the few hides that will not tan well are those of the whale and the pig, both of which are so charged with oil that they will not take tannic acid. So the whale-skin is useless, while the pigskin, impossible for boots and shoes, is roughly dressed to make the most enduring of saddles for riding.

Men are constantly on the alert for new sources of supply for the tanner. They use the hides of horses, cattle, sheep, goats, deer, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, and the skins of snakes, lizards, dogs, rats, mice, cats, and many other animals. The bulk of these are tanned, but some are prepared for use in other ways.

Not all skins become leather. Some, from the sheep and goat, are split to make parchment, on which all our old deeds and other writings were engrossed. Of these there is one at South Kensington as perfect today as when it was inscribed 700 years ago.

A Novel Way to Grow an Orange Tree

HERE is a novel way of growing a miniature orange tree in an orange skin. Take a good-sized orange and then, from the stalk end, remove a round of rind which might be about an inch and a half across. Through this opening work out the pulp of the fruit, taking great care not to make holes in the skin at any other point. Now fill the rind of the orange with fine dry soil, or sand, and put the whole thing in some airy place until the skin has become hard. Then pack some moist soil into the rind and into this push a pip from an orange. The pip should be about an inch down in the soil. If the soil is moist at the start no more water will be needed until the pip starts to develop in a little plant.

Keep the little tree near to a window where it gets a fair amount of light and it will not be long before a number of the glossy leaves, which are very fragrant, are produced. In time the roots will tend to push their way through the rind, and the tips of these must be pinched off. This will help in stunting the tree.

History of Egypt Told in Modern Stamps

IT was in Egypt, fed by the life-giving water of the Nile, that one of man's first civilizations grew up.

A glance at any map of Africa will show you that all the northeastern part of that great continent is desert except one strip of green—Egypt. And the only thing that keeps Egypt from being as barren and scorched as the rest of that desert land is the Nile, "Mother of Civilizations," winding its way from the lakes and jungles of Central Africa to make the desert green and fertile.

We know that long before there were any written records of history, tribes fought with one another for the right to live along the banks of the Nile, thus beginning the exciting history of that river. From these early battles the dwellers in the Nile valley evidently learned that it was well to live together in harmony in order that all might enjoy the bountiful crops that Egypt's rich land, abundant water, and warm climate gave them. They learned to live under one King, and about six thousand years ago—which is a mighty long time—began the rule of the great Pharaohs.

These ancient monarchs are best remembered today for the gigantic pyramids they built as tombs for themselves. Sometimes in museums we see Egyptian mummies taken from their rocky graves after thousands of years. One of the early Pharaohs built for himself a small tomb of rock. The next Pharaoh thought this was a good idea and built his tomb a little bigger. Having it bigger pleased his vanity.

Before long each Egyptian King was trying to prove his superior power by building huge pyramids like those you see on the Egyptian air-mail stamp. This was a great hardship on the country, for these monuments had to be built entirely by hand labor. One historian tells us that it took one hundred thousand men twenty years to build the biggest pyramid. You can see that keeping that many men from doing the useful work of raising crops or herding cattle would not be good for any country. Soon Egypt was too poor for the Pharaohs to build any more such tombs. Their reign passed on into history, and other Egyptian rulers came and went.

Altogether there were five different civilizations in this rich valley between the beginning of history and the time of Christ. So you see what we mean by saying that the Nile is the "Mother of Civilizations." Without this river the land that had so many civilizations would have been nothing but barren, sun-baked desert. The early Egyptians must have realized this, too, for they worshipped the Nile as a god.

Do you wonder how all this information about ancient Egypt has come to us today? The twenty-millimeter stamp picturing the ruins of the Temple of Karnak at Luxor gives us a clue. In the dry desert air many of the great palaces and temples of those ancient days have lasted down to the present. Covering the walls of these buildings are Egyptian hieroglyphics that modern scientists have learned to read. On the arch of the stamp, you can see this queer writing.

On walls like these throughout Egypt are carved the adventures of its kings and priests and mythical gods. These carvings have told us almost all we know of the early history of Egypt.

Despite the air-mail stamp with its

The Mouse That Mewed

RHODA and Elizabeth were excited when Grandad asked them to stay. They always enjoyed staying with their grandparents, but this time they were especially pleased, for Grandad had just moved into a lovely little house in the country.

The twins liked everything, the house and garden, and the barn where they could play when it was wet. But most of all they liked their bedroom. It was really the attic, but so pretty. There were two little white beds and two white dressing-tables, and white woolly rugs on the floor. And there was the dearest little dormer window, with white muslin curtains moving in the breeze.

"Oh, Grandma, how lovely!" said the two little girls.

"You see," smiled Grandma, "we expect you to stay here quite a lot."

That night Rhoda and Elizabeth lay watching the stars through the little window. They were very happy. But suddenly Rhoda heard a soft thud, and then a little rustling sound. She lay quite still, trying not to breathe.

There was a rustling and a scratching. "Elizabeth!" she whispered. "Can you hear it?"

"Yes!" said Elizabeth, "you can come into my bed."

plane buzzing over the pyramids, Egypt is a land of yesterday. In fields beside ruins of ancient grandeur Egyptian farmers draw water from the Nile just as their ancestors of long ago did. Except in a few places the bustling world of today has passed Egypt by. The wise old Nile flows on, and the small watercraft that the stamp shows are just like those which Nile boatmen used when Pharaoh's daughter found the baby Moses in the bulrushes.—Charles R. Stratz, Jr., in Wee Wisdom.

Home of Children's Poet Is To Be Made a Memorial

JAMES Whitcomb Riley while he lived was the children's poet, and we think there are still children who remember him, though it was more than sixty years ago that his last poem was written.

They remember him because of his gay verses on The Funny Little Fellow, who had a heart as mellow as an apple over-ripe and the brightest little twinkle when a funny thing occurred, and who was rather like Whitcomb Riley himself; or because of his song of the Days Gone By:

O the days gone by! O the days gone by!
The apples in the orchard and the pathway through the rye;
When the bloom was on the clover, and the blue was in the sky,
And my happy heart brimmed over, in the days gone by.

Happy days! Whitcomb Riley always remembered them, and that is why his own people, who live about Greenfield in Indiana, U.S.A., where he was born, are going to make a memorial of the house where he lived.

Already there is a small statue of him in the town square, for which thousands of American schoolchildren subscribed their cents; but the green-shuttered, white, wooden frame house, and an apple

"I daren't," said Rhoda in a small voice.

So Elizabeth screwed up her courage and took a mighty leap into Rhoda's bed.

For a moment the rustling stopped; then it began again.

"It's a mouse," said Rhoda, in a frightened whisper.

"They always have them in the country," said Elizabeth. "Big, hungry ones."

"Oh, don't!" said Rhoda, shuddering.

Just then came a very loud rustle and a squeaking sound. This was too much.

"Oh, help!" shrieked the twins at the top of their voices.

"Why, whatever is the matter?" said Grandad from the doorway.

"A mouse!" shuddered Elizabeth.

"I heard it mew!" said Elizabeth, with a shiver.

Grandad switched on the light. There were the two white beds, the two little girls clinging together—and there from under a heap of tissue paper, with a proud swagger and a defiant rustle, came Black Tom, the cat!

"So there's your mouse!" cried Grandad, laughing. "He must have come in through the window. 'Well, well!' he added. "That's the first time I ever heard of a mouse that mewed."

tree in the garden, will be something that will be a better reminder of him.

He was called the Hoosier poet, because Hoosier is a nickname given to the country people of Indiana, though nobody can certainly tell why.

Nuts That Give Light

THE candle-nut grows in all very hot countries and is much prized. It bears a large number of heart-shaped nuts that are about as big as walnuts. These, when they have been roasted, are very good to eat, but the South Sea Islanders and the natives of the West Indies (and other peoples) use them in another fashion.

The nuts are taken from their hard shells and then bored, after which they are threaded on rushes or thin strips of bark. In many native villages these ropes of nuts may be seen hanging on the walls in big bunches. When somebody needs a light he cuts off a length of nut-ropes, twists it up into the leaf of a palm or a pine, and then lights it at the top. The leaf acts as a candlestick and it also adds to the brightness of the burning nuts, for it burns on the outside of them.

Do You Know the Answers?

- 1—What does the difference in the way Hindus wear turbans signify?
- 2—What is whey?
- 3—What fish is burned to give light?
- 4—What is a photo-radiogram?
- 5—What does khaki mean?
- 6—What kind of bugs are the largest?
- 7—On the desert is the temperature much lower at night than in the daytime?
- 8—When was tea first used as a beverage?
- 9—Why is Halley's Comet so famous?
- 10—Are there two sides to a rainbow?

Answers

- 1—So far as the turban differs beyond the personal taste of the wearer, they indicate the province from which he came, the weaves, dyes, etc., being highly specialized in different localities.
- 2—Whey is the watery part of milk left from cheese making.
- 3—The oil-lamp or candlefish, which is found on the Pacific coast from Oregon upward, is dried and used as a lamp by the Alaskan Indians. It is a fish from twelve to fifteen inches long, with very oily flesh.
- 4—Photo-radio is the process of sending a single picture from one point to another by electricity in three to twenty minutes. Capt. R. H. Ranger effected the first completely automatic radio transmission of pictures across the ocean in 1924, which was called a photo-radiogram.
- 5—In Hindustani it means dust, earth or ashes, and is applied to dust or clay-colored fabrics.
- 6—Fish killers are the largest of existing bugs, sometimes reaching a length of four inches. They breed and develop in water, but live at least part of the time on land.
- 7—The sands of the desert grow cool, if not entirely cold. In desert regions the radiation at night is usually very high, and, in consequence, temperatures fall during the night hours much below those of the midday period.
- 8—According to a Chinese legend, it was discovered by the Emperor Chinnung, 2737 B.C. From China it was carried into Japan and finally reached Europe through the Dutch.
- 9—Halley's Comet is famous because it was the first whose periodicity was predicted. This was in 1704, but the verification did not take place until 1759.
- 10—You can never see a rainbow unless you are between it and the sun. You could never see a rainbow if you were looking at the sun, so if you see one you may know that anyone on the other side of it could not see it because he would be looking at the sun.

Beads of Silver Paper Are Easy to Make

THESE beads look so pretty when they are finished, and they are ever so easy to make.

Save all the pieces of silver paper you can find, then roll the paper very tightly into little balls and ovals. Thread a needle with some strong cotton and push it through the centre of each little ball, so that you have a long string of silver beads. They will look ever so pretty, and you can either sew a clasp on the ends of the cotton or tie them with a pretty piece of ribbon.

Colored or patterned paper looks very nice mixed with the plain silver paper, too.

Some Stories of Magic Connected With Old Mirrors

THE word mirror is said to come from a Latin word meaning to admire, and it is certain that for thousands of years mirrors have been used by people anxious to look their best.

Mirrors were long made of polished metal; the Egyptians, Greeks and Romans used thin disks of bronze, which were slightly convex and polished at one side; the back was often richly chased or engraved. Pliny tells us there was a mirror factory at Sidon; and though mirrors were unknown in Homer's day, there were silver-mirrors in Pompey's time. Ancient palaces had hand mirrors and also wall mirrors, some moving up and down like a sash window.

No old Greek mirrors were found before one came to light at Corinth in 1867, but it is known that they were commonly used. Many had beautiful handles like little statues, and some of the loveliest were made about 400 years before Christ.

Carrying little mirrors in handbags is no new fashion, for the ladies of the Middle Ages carried mirrors in their girdles, and as far back as 625 Pope Boniface the Fourth sent Queen Ethelburga of Northumbria a small hand mirror. Even the motorist's mirror is believed to have had its counterpart at least 2,000 years ago. Excavating a chariot burial in Yorkshire some years ago, a small piece of metal was found on the front of a chariot. Believed to have been highly polished at one side, it is thought that the Ancient Briton who perhaps drove furiously against the Romans may have used the metal as a mirror to reflect what was behind him.

Mirror superstitions have not yet died out in Japan; and all who know the story of King Arthur's knights will remember that Merlin had a magic mirror which he gave to King Rhyence. The Squire among Chaucer's pilgrims told the story of Camelot's mirror, which warned the owner of the approach of misfortune. Oliver Goldsmith imagined a mirror which showed not only the face but also the kind of mind behind it; and Sir John Davies, who lived in Queen Elizabeth's day, describes what he calls Vulcan's mirror, which showed past, present and future.

The Lady of Shalott

WE read of a mirror in Tennyson's poem, "The Lady of Shalott." As she worked at her loom, all she ever saw was in the mirror before her. She was told she must never look down on Camelot. She saw only the shadows of the world till Sir Lancelot came riding by, flashing suddenly into the mirror. Then:

"She left the web, she left the loom,
She made three paces through the room,
She saw the water-lily bloom,
She saw the helmet and the plume,
She looked down to Camelot.
Out flew the web and floated wide;
The mirror cracked from side to side;
'The curse is come upon me,' cried
The Lady of Shalott."

One of the most charming of all stories for children is Lewis Carroll's "Through the Looking Glass"; and one of the most famous chapters in the New Testament has the words: "For now we see through a glass, darkly, but then face to face."

Autumn

Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness!
Close bosom-friend of the maturing sun;
Conspiring with him how to load and bless
With fruit the vines that round the thatch-eaves run;
To bend with apples the mossed cottage-trees,
And fill all fruit with ripeness to the core;
To swell the gourd, and plump the hazel shells
With a sweet kernel; to set budding more
And still more, later flowers for the bees,
Until they think warm days will never cease;
For Summer has o'erbrimmed their clammy cells.

Modern Folks to Meet in Guise of Archaic Offices

Must Be Loving Brethren and Friends of Cinque Ports—All Immune From Arrest During Session—Beaver Hats in Kensington—London Can Be Up-to-Date

LONDON (BUP).—It sounds ancient, but if today in the year 1937 you happen to be one of the "Loving Brethren, Combarons and Friends" of the Cinque Ports you are summoned to meet at a special court of the "Brotherhood and Guestling." Your summons will not specify for your attendance a date which you can pick out on a wall calendar; the Brothers, Combarons and Friends must meet on "the Saturday after the Feast of Saint Michael and All Angels."

The brethren who answer, the summons will meet the speaker of the Cinque Ports and the mayors of each "port town and limb." And all sorts of up-to-date people in the guise of archaic titles and offices.

The main business of the meeting will be to see that arrangements are made to the end that the towns and counties along the narrow part of the English Channel—Kent and Sussex—shall not be invaded and ravished by our friends the French.

TOWNS AND LIMBS
Actually, the Cinque—five—Ports are Romney, Hastings, Sandwich, Dover and Hythe, but in the course of the centuries they seem to have co-opted Rye and Winchelsea (which are the "towns") and the "limbs" are various little townlets of the two counties still existing.

The records of the proceedings will be entered in the Black Book, the entries in which began in 1572 because the White Book got full with entries which began in 1433.

All this may sound very archaic and unpractical in these days, but there's at least one advantage in attending the court which may be of use. If any of the loving brethren, combarons and friends happen to have committed a crime—parks his car in the wrong place or omits to pay his income tax—he is absolutely immune from arrest during the session.

BEAVERS AND QUILLS
Still speaking of ancient things which are still alive in London.

Right in the West-End of London—Kensington—you can still find a shop where you can buy a beaver hat, those old-fashioned plush looking specimens of headgear which our forefathers and mothers wore a century or so ago. Goodness knows who wants them today—but there they are.

If you want to write uncomfortably and scratchily you can go to Southeast London—Peckham—and buy a quill pen, such as, say, Sir Walter Scott used to write his Waverley Novels. Any number of goosequill pens are still to be found in official places, courts of law and clubs all over the country. And if you want to be quite consistent and in the period you can at the same place buy a little box full of the very fine sand which was used in the quill pen era to absorb the ink before blotting paper was thought of.

Again, if you have been reading the patent medicine advertisements and think you recognize in yourself the symptoms of the modern blood pressure, we hear so much about—well, right in the heart of the City of London, five minutes from Fleet Street newspaperland, you can buy for tenpence or so a leech. And the leech will sit upon the back of your neck and engorge itself upon your blood just as its ancestors did in the old days when the "leeches"—the medical men of old time—regarded bleeding as a universal panacea for human ills.

THE MODERN WAY
Now to be very up-to-date in London.

Lt.-Colonel Crutchley, Public Relations Officer to the General Postoffice, said the other day that the Postoffice authorities were planning a central bureau for London where inquiries after general information would, by dialling a special code, find themselves in direct touch with someone who could satisfy them.

Said he: "For a large percentage of the population the normal way of seeking information is to make inquiries at the counter of the local postoffice. There is something mildly intimidating about a counter. That is my own feeling—speaking as one who delegates as much of his shopping as possible to the female members of his family—whereas, in the modern bookshop where one can wander around unrestricted by barriers, I am perfectly happy."

It was in deference to that psychological theory, he said, that their aim was to include a comfortable room in the new postoffices and wherever possible in existing buildings as opportunity offered.

Whether postoffice counters were intimidating or not the

One Look Enough At Lady Tourist For Jungle Kings

WINDHOEK, S.W. Africa (BUP).—Lions are just as easy to manage as pussycats, according to one woman tourist who had an unusual experience near here. One of a party who were camping at Namatoni, a few miles from here, awoke in the early morning to find a half-dozen lions standing not ten feet from the tent. "Shoo!" she shouted. The beasts looked at her for one moment and then turned tail and fled.

then was first used a now famous expression, "Robbing Peter to pay Paul."

NO PRIVATE CALLS

I don't know precisely what happens to the money we pay for income tax, but whatever happens to it we are now assured that it will not include the private telephone calls of the myriads of civil servants in Whitehall and other Government offices.

If it happens that the office telephone is used for private calls, My Lords of the Treasury do not intend to let the taxpayer pay the piper. Private calls must be paid for by the caller and he gets a receipt.

So strict is the check on trunk and toll calls (a toll call is something between a local and a long distance call) that the Treasury operators will not accept a charge for such calls unless it is certified by an officer. Without such a certificate the caller must pay out of his own pocket.

However, there is another side to the question. Civil servants complain that so far from getting private telephone calls through at public expense, they frequently pay for public calls themselves. The reason is that they have to prove that calls they make are not private—the onus is on them—but the telephone bills come in so late after the date of the calls that they very often cannot remember whether the call was private or not or why it was made.

So a not usually kindly Treasury does endeavor to temper the wind to us—the shorn lambs of the Inland Revenue Commissioners.

Australians Are Betting More Heavily

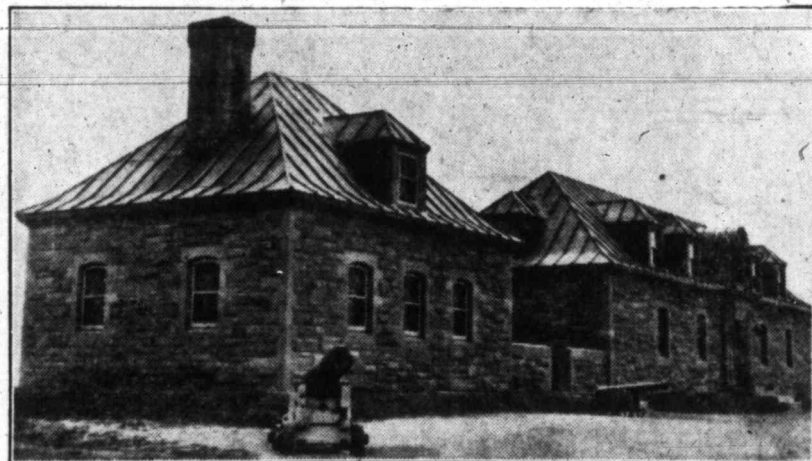

MELBOURNE (BUP).—Australian racegoers are breaking all betting records now that prosperity has returned.

In South Australia it is estimated that annual betting has increased by $25,000,000 since bookmakers were licensed in the state less than four years ago.

In Victoria during the last twelve months, the "Tote" has been booming. Totalisator investments for Melbourne's two leading courses reached a combined record of over $6,500,000 in the year under survey.

Meanwhile, Victoria is considering legislation to check illegal betting, while New South Wales is preparing a betting control bill which would prevent the selling of "tips" and the making of starting-price bets.

Historical Museum Opened by Governor

Situated on the eastern coast of Cape Breton, Louisbourg was once the proudest fortress and only walled city in North America. After changing hands several times over a period of half a century, it finally fell into the hands of the British in 1758, a year before the capture of Quebec.

CAVES ARE WONDERFUL IN BEAUTY

Mighty Jenolan Caverns Among Australia's Most Fascinating Sights

LIGHTS ARE PLACED TO ADD TO GLITTER

SYDNEY, Australia.—Among Australia's most beautiful sights, and comparable to anything of their kind in the world, are Australia's Jenolan Caves, a series of mighty caverns in the rugged valleys of the Great Dividing Range just an eight-hour rail or bus journey from Sydney.

There is a world of fascination about any cave. But caves created by underground rivers and redecorated from end to end with delicate limestone formations, hung with magic tapestries, and draped with delicate lace-work supported on natural fluted columns are sights never to be forgotten.

CEASELESS DRIPPING

There are ten of these wonder caves, which have been decorated by the ceaseless dripping of water through the great limestone belts above them.

After driving through miles of beautiful, wild mountain scenery the visitor gets his first glimpse of Jenolan as he descends the five-mile hill. It is the Grand Arch, a huge natural bridge 470 feet long and forty to eighty feet high, with a varying width of from fifty to 227 feet.

Just below it is the willow-bordered blue lake. Carbonate of lime is the cause of the beautiful coloring of the water. This lake is the confluence of three rivers, two of which flow underground, and the third through the Grand Arch.

NATURAL BRIDGE

There is another natural bridge high above the Grand Arch. It is Carrolita Arch, and is sixty feet high and forty feet wide. It would be difficult to name one cave more beautiful than the others, because each has its own peculiar beauties that seem better than the last one. One of the most fascinating is the River Styx, with a depth of twenty-five feet. The glorious reflections of the cave's minarets and columns in the water give the cave a double beauty.

The caves are illuminated, but the lights are so placed that they add to the natural beauty and make the hanging conopseas glitter like precious jewels. The caves were discovered in 1838 by a Charles Whelan, while he was following the tracks of stolen cattle.

FOUND OLD CAMP

But an outlaw named McKeowan had been there before him. His camp was found by Whelan. The river flowing through the Grand Arch is still known as McKeowan's Creek. Jenolan is an aboriginal word and means a high mountain.

Six square miles of surrounding country have been reserved by the Government to protect the caves, and it is a sanctuary for Australian birds, animals and native flora.

Visitors to Australia should not miss Jenolan. It is one of Nature's greatest masterpieces.

GOLFER KILLS RABBIT AND BAGS A BIRDIE

SYDNEY, Australia.—E. S. King, Moss Vale Golf Club champion, killed a rabbit with a drive from the fifth tee and holed out for "a birdie." His drive to the 240 yards hole struck the rabbit on the head and cannoned off close to the hole.

No Bushrangers or Convicts Included in Australian Pageant

Seamy Side of Commonwealth's History Will Not Be Shown in Celebration of 150th Anniversary to Be Held Next Year

SYDNEY, N.S.W. (BUP).—There will be no references to convicts or bushrangers in the pageantry with which Australia will depict her history on the occasion of the 150th anniversary celebrations next year.

The Minister in charge of the celebrations has decided that the pageants of history shall not depict the seamy side.

"There is really no outstanding feature you can bring them into," he said.

DO NOT AGREE

Other people, however, do not agree.

"To gloss over an important part of our national history, simply because to some people it doesn't seem quite 'nice,' would be good evidence to the civilized world that we are no more than sentimental barbarians," H. M. Greene, Sydney University Librarian and one of the leading authorities on the early days of Australia, declared in expressing the view of the opposition.

"To stage a pageant of the landing of the first fleet, and exclude any suggestion of convicts, when the only reason for sending ships was to establish a convict settlement, is absurd. In any pageant which attempts to portray the development of Australia, it is impossible to ignore convicts, or even bushrangers. It cannot be authentic if the darker pages of the national history are torn out.

HELPED MAKE NATION

"It would also be unjust to ignore the many men and women whose labor and suffering went to the making of the nation. Convicts built the first roads, helped in the first exploration, and in the clearing of land for settlement. It is to convicts that Sydney owes some of her finest buildings."

Still at Work After Long Life

SYDNEY, N.S.W. (BUP).—The engine of the first motor car ever seen in Papua, imported secondhand in 1915, is still in regular use.

In 1918 a merchant converted the car into a delivery truck. In 1920 the Golf Club used it to pull a mowing machine. In 1923 a man transferred the engine to a launch. In 1928 a woodworker set up the engine in his workshop to drive the machinery. In 1928 an engineer installed it in his repair shop.

BRITISH PREMIER SEEKS SOLUTION

LONDON (BUP).—Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain is anxious to solve the "Mystery of the Vanished Egg."

He tells the story in the current issue of The Countryman.

"When I first came here (to Downing Street)," he writes, "in January of 1936, I at once affixed a nesting-box to one of the trees in the garden. Nothing happened for a long time, but last March I saw a pair of blue, or perhaps I should say, black tits, for they were a grimy couple, flitting about the branches of a lime tree. 'Shortly afterwards they were flying in and out of the box. 'I did not have time to make any examination till the week-end after I had become Prime Minister, when, on looking into the box, I found the nest complete and three eggs in it. 'Unfortunately, I saw little more movement, and looking again in June found that the nest was deserted and the three eggs had been reduced to two. Now, what is the solution of the mystery of the vanished egg?'"

FAVORITE TRICK IS SPOILED IN CEYLON

COLOMBO, Ceylon (BUP).—Walking barefoot over burning coals and logs is a favorite trick of the "miracle workers" of Ceylon. But the trick has been rather spoiled in Ceylon, for 500 people have just done it without mishap at the annual fire-walking ceremony at Udappu.

Three logs of tamarind wood and live coals were burning for a length of twelve to fifteen feet. All those who had taken the vows rubbed their feet with saffron, and, headed by the priest, walked unscathed over the fire.

EAST PORTION COMPLETE

The east portion of the Anglican cathedral, with choir and transepts, is complete, and work is now proceeding on the tower and great space beneath. When completed, it will have cost $10,000,000.

Of the Roman Catholic cathedral there is less to see, since the work is still below ground. Thousands of tons of stone have been hewn out, and in their place the crypt walls are rising towards the floor level of the cathedral. More than 2,000,000 bricks, set in cement, and many tons of Cornish granite have been laid.

Back to back across the width of the building are two crypt chapels, in one of which, the Chapel of the Seven Dolours, the Archbishop, Dr. Downey, will sing the first mass on October 31.

TWO YEARS FOR CRYPT

Two years more will be needed to complete the crypt, and then building at ground level will begin. The rate of progress is restricted by the funds available, but fifteen years will be required, it is estimated, to build the east section.

The main task will follow—building the enormous body of the cathedral and the huge dome, 168 feet in diameter.

DIES IN QUEST OF LONGEVITY

Priests Who Imposed Purification Rite Heavily Fined in India

SIMLA, India (BUP).—Priests told a sixty-year-old man at Garh, near Sirmoor State, that his days were numbered and that only a purification rite would prolong his life.

He agreed to undergo the rite for a fee of 500 rupees (about $185), and at sunrise on the appointed day he was placed before a sacrificial fire and given a cold water bath while the priests chanted religious verses. Then the real ceremony began and until sunset "holy water" was poured on him in an unending stream from brass vessels.

That night the man contracted a cold which developed into pneumonia from which he died a few days later.

The priests were each fined 500 rupees, to be paid as compensation to the widow.

WILL LEAD CRICKET TOUR

Lord Tennyson, descendant of the famous Victorian Poet Laureate, will take a touring cricket team to India this winter. He relaxes in the beautiful Parrington House at Freshwater, Isle of Wight, in which the poet came to live in 1852. Lord and Lady Tennyson are shown outside the Arbor in which the poet wrote his famous "Enoch Arden."

NEW MILLIONS FOR INDUSTRIES

Many Factories Will Provide Employment for Thousands in Australia

SYDNEY.—A prediction that new industries worth $40,000,000 would be established in Australia almost immediately was made to the Associated Chamber of Manufacturers by the Prime Minister (Mr. Lyons), who said he based his statement on information obtained in London about companies operating or intending to operate in the Commonwealth.

Emphasizing that these would be additional to shale oil and flow oil proposals, Mr. Lyons outlined the following as the new industries to be established:

Airplanes, alkali products, embracing soda ash, caustic soda, calcium chloride and ammonium chloride; paper pulp from Australian hardwoods, newsprint paper, writing and fine printing paper, steel sheets for motor bodies, refrigerators, nitro cotton for lacquers and explosives, manufacture of wood boards from hardwood pulp, fireboard from straw and waste products, carpets, rayon fabrics for apparel lining and tung oil.

RECORD EMPLOYMENT

"It is not possible yet to calculate the direct and indirect employment which will be given as a result of these concrete proposals to establish new industries in Australia," he added, but it will certainly run into many thousands."

Mentioning that already $56,000,000 worth of new industries had been established since 1932, making a total of $96,000,000 attributable to the Government's tariff policy, Mr. Lyons said figures showed that for every week of the five years period 723 employees were found new work at arbitration award rates.

A special survey, he said, had revealed the following: in 1928-29 Australia's 22,916 factories employed 450,482 hands; in 1929-30 21,657 factories employed 336,658, and in 1935-36 24,895 employed 492,771. He had not the exact figures for June, but at a conservative estimate they had increased to a record level of 525,000—an increase on 1931 figures of 188,000.

Commits Bigamy With First Wife

DUMFRIES, Scotland (BUP).—Andrew Drummond, a shopkeeper, has been sentenced to four months imprisonment for committing bigamy with his first wife.

The story told in court was that Drummond married a Miss Annie Yule in 1929. In 1933 she divorced him and a year later Drummond married Janet Watson. She obtained a separation in 1935. Last July Drummond met his first wife again, heard she had inherited some money, and "married" her over the blacksmith's anvil at Gretna.

HAS MANY BOOK CENSORS

DUBLIN (BUP).—Since every adult in the Irish Free State may make a complaint about a book which may result in it being banned, there are approximately 3,000,000 censors in the Free State. In the past eight years 1,000 books have been banned.
